It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by true immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City,
Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid,	1.25
Per dozen " "	13.30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 60 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC. Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1.25 per copy, postpaid, or $10.00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$2.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	2.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25
32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION.	25
BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.	$1.75
Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Moomaw, prepaid,	.75
Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid,	.75
12 copies, by Express,	7.00
Pious Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid,	.45
Browns Pocket Concordance,	.60
German & English Testaments,	.75
NEAD'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid,	1.45
" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid	1.40
COMPANION Volume 3, bound post paid,	$2.7
Reserved at the office,	2.25

HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco, To ministers on Tobacco, Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63, Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interest."

228 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,

431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

Will fill orders for Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or PANACEA West of Ohio.

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.

Waynesboro, Franklin Co, Pa.

Will control the Eastern and Southern States. All letters should be carefully directed as above, and letters containing money must be registered.

This year was more favorable for curing herbs than any other for ten years, the medicine is therefore warrented perfect.

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, SEPT. 30, 1873. NUMBER 39.

The Last Supper.

BY JOAQUIN MILLER.

"And when they had sung a hymn they went out into the Mount of Olives."

What song sang the twelve with the Savior,
When finished the Sacrament wine?
Were they bowed and subdued in behavior,
Or bold as made bold with a sign?

Were the hairy breasts strong and defiant?
Were the naked arms brawny and strong?
Were the bearded lips lifted reliant,
Thrust forth and full sturdy with song!

What sang they? What sweet song of Zion?
With Christ in their midst like a crown?
While here sat Saint Peter, the lion,
And there, like a lamb, with head down,

Sat Saint John, with his silken and raven
Rich hair on his shoulders, and eyes
Lifting up to the faces unshaven
Like a sensitive child in surprise.

Was the song as strong fisherman swinging
Their nets full of hope to the sea?
Or low, like the ripple-wave, singing
Sea-songs on their loved Galilee?

Were they sad with foreshadows of sorrows
Like the birds that sing low when the breeze
Is tip toe with a tale of to-morrows—
Of earthquakes and sinking of seas?

Ah! soft was their song as the waves are
That fall in low musical moans;
And sad I should say as the winds are
That blow by the white gravestones.

Hold on, My Heart.

Hold on, my heart, in thy believing
The steadfast only wears the crown.
He who when stormy waves are heaving
Parts with his anchor shall go down;
But he who Jesus holds through all
Shall stand, though earth and heavens should fall.

Hold in thy murmurs, heaven arrainging,
The patient, see God's loving face;
Who bear their burdens uncomplaining,
'Tis they who win the Father's grace.
He wounds himself who braves the rod,
And sets himself to flight with God.

Hold out! There comes an end to sorrow;
Hope from the dust shall conquering rise;
The storm proclaims a sunnier morrow:
The cross points on to paradise.
The Father reigneth: cease all doubt;
Hold on, my heart, hold in, hold out!

For the COMPANION.

Past, Present, and Future Time.

Time is a measured portion of duration, and is divided into three divisions. These three divisions appear to us, who are now on the stage of human life. Lo, the past! Behold there the remains that time has left behind us! There is the cemetery, filled with the records of the past. What a volume of Biography is the burying-place! There they lie—the young and old, the humble and esteemed, the active and brave—sleeping in their silent sepulchres, all changing into the earth from whence they came. And the oak, in whose branches the fowls of the air once had their habitation; is now fallen and extinct. The past is gone. The monuments of pride and ambition, and wickedness of rulers and kings, are crumbling into dust; but let them crumble! Heroes, glory, splendor, and renown, are fast fading away; but let them fade. But the dead shall live forever. Those that sleep in dust shall awake. The past is gone, and gone forever. O how valuable is time! O how precious! as every grain of gold is precious, so is every moment of time. It is good to talk with our past hours, and ask them what report they bear to heaven. The future is concealed to us: clouds and darkness hide it from our view. We know not what a day nor an hour may bring forth; we know, however, that death is sure, and after death the judgment, and after the judgment the issues thereof, "Eternal death" or "Everlasting life." This is all we know, and this is enough, if we are wise. How much happiness there may be in the future for us, we know not. We may plant, build, and lay up worldly goods for many years, and yet, to-day may be our last day—to-night our souls may be required of us. If then, the past is gone, and we may never behold the future, it is our duty to improve the present and prepare for the future. God in his mercy offers salvation: "Now is the day of salvation, now is the accepted time." Without salvation, we are lost forever. O let us think of our souls, which live always, either in happiness or misery. Let us think of Christ and his precious blood, of heaven and its happiness. Upon our present conduct rests our future welfare and eternal destiny. What does it profit us, if we gain the whole world and lose our own souls? What are we treasuring up? What are we sowing? What are we going to reap? Or, what are we doing? Let conscience answer, and the mind determine whether we are proper subjects for God's kingdom or not. Let us think of the past, and all its guilt—of the future and its uncertainty, of the present as ours. To-day or to-morrow may be our last. "Now is the day of salvation;" now we may call upon the name of the Lord and lead a Christian life henceforth, rejoice in glorious hope, and have our names enrolled among the children of God, and become glorified citizens of immortality in heaven.

N. H. SHUTT.

Buena Vista, O.

For the COMPANION.

A Want of Faith.

Feeling weak and tired this morning, I sat down to read, and picked up the COMPANION, dated July 29th, 1873. My eyes rested on the Bishop's Lecture, at Dale City, Pa. On reading this, I was again reminded of what so often grieves me—a want of faith. There is no faith in the world like the Catholic faith. Protestant Christian faith is almost as a dead faith, compared to the Catholic. I have but a faint knowledge of the reality of their faith; but from what I have seen, and heard, and read of them, they doubtless have no fears. They seem to have hope that they are in the light of all knowledge. They claim to be equal with God, from the beginning, and even superior to God since Christ; hence they worship and honor Mary as the mother of God. If there are any readers of the C. F. C. who know but little about them, and have not read this lecture, read it now.

Curiosity led me to a Catholic fair, just a few years ago, in Harrisburg, where I saw the portrait of Pope Pius the Ninth, hanging on the wall in the appearance of life. The good women talked to me of him, and pointed to him, asking me if he did not look pleasant. They looked so pleasant and happy as if it were God with them. And how attentive they are in worship, and promptly pay all their vows, and will sacrifice almost anything to meet the approbation of the Pope. I know of one or two orphan girls who had thousands of dollars left them, who gave it to the Catholic church, and went to the nunnery and became nuns.

So powerful is the faith of popery. And if Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world, and the Old and the New Testaments are truth, they are a most lamentably mistaken people. Now, when we see what great faith these people have, who declared the Pope infallible, who worship the creature more than the Creator, can we not, who have the supreme God as our Father, Jesus Christ our Savior as our elder brother, being legally adopted into the family of God, can we not show a little more faith by our good works? Can we not deny ourselves a little more of the pride of life, and crucify the lust of the flesh a little more? It will only bring us nearer in our association with the Father. Our privileges are the associations of the people with whom the spirit of Jesus and holy angel spirits dwell. God also has promised to be with those who are of a broken and contrite heart. Having such associations we have peace, we have comfort, no matter what our situation in life may be. Want and wickedness may surround us, but we still are happy. And the promise of everlasting life in heaven, with those holy associations not invisible but real, are they not sufficient to encourage the believer in Christ to steadfastness, to perseverance, to energetic faithfulness? to that faithfulness which worketh by love—that love which moves into action to the obedience of Christ—a self-sacrificing love, a love to be about the Father's business, to keep the temple clean, to mingle with the poor and distribute to the needy, to read God's word with delight, and talk of his goodness, and strive to be at the appointed time and place of worship, whether in the closet, at the family altar, or in the public house—above that despiseth all things which stand in opposition to God and his word, in Christ Jesus? If this love is the motive power of our life, our faith is made manifest. But how often do we see this disposition reversed into a cold or lukewarm state! There are always some who draw back, and they have their influence too. "O ye of little faith, come ye to the feet of Jesus and learn of him, and your faith will be increased.

MARY ROHRER.

SUNDAY A DAY OF GLADNESS.—God does not mean us to be somber, least of all upon Sunday, the glad feast of the resurrection, a day whose atmosphere throughout should be one of quiet, unworldly joy. Let not boisterous merriment disturb the calm; let hearty worship, and kindly intercourse, and refreshing rest—rest of tired mind from its dragging brood of week-day anxieties, rest of tired body from the round of week-day toil—let this be the employment, this the tone of the hallowed day. Religion, not in every word, act, look, obtruded with painful effort, but present in the heart, should pervade the day, its rest, its reading, its conversation. Oh! never represent Sunday—at any rate to the young—as a dull and gloomy day; nor dream that a heart devoted to the kind God need abjure all that is genial and joyous, or that a subdued, spirit-broken step is necessary to the child who has chosen to walk beside that tender Father, holding by his hand.

The austere sects excite the most enthusiasm at first; but the temperate sects have always been the most durable.—Joubert.

A Word of Kindness.

How softly on the bruised heart
A word of kindness falls,
And to the dry and parched soul
The moist'ning tear-drop calls!
Oh! if they knew who walked the earth
'Mid sorrow, grief and pain
The power a word of kindness hath,
'Twere Paradise again.

The weakest and the poorest may
The simple pittance give.
And bid delight to withered hearts,
Return again and live.
Oh! what is life if love be lost,
If man's unkind to man?
Or what the heaven that waits beyond
This brief and mortal span?

As stars upon the tranquil sea
In mimic glory shine,
So words of kindness in the heart
Reflect the source divine.
Oh! then, be kind, who'er thou art
That breathest mortal breath,
And it shall brighten all thy life,
And sweeten even death.

For the COMPANION.

Regeneration.

We desire to make a few remarks on the subject of Regeneration, as one of the cardinal and fundamental doctrines of the Bible. Ministers of the gospel should often and strenuously insist on it in their preaching. It should be properly and carefully explained, as an error on this point cannot fail to be hurtful and ruinous to souls. The evidences of this change should be pointed out with clearness, and the doing of this will be of vast utility in winning souls to Christ. The necessity of Regeneration, as a change, should be made out by fair and sound arguments from the gospel, and pressed upon the conscience by every consideration calculated to give it effect.

The importance of preaching on this subject, is a vigorous enforcement of the duty of immediate and unqualified submission to God, beginning with repentance and faith. Sinners must give up all and submit to God, or they cannot be saved. It is perfectly right to use all the appointed means for the attainment of this change of nature, or disposition of the mind; such as hearing the preaching of the gospel, reading of the Bible, prayer and fasting, after the example of the Ninevites; but all this will be fruitless without repentance and faith, and the consecration of the whole man to God. Ministers of the gospel should copy the example of Peter and Paul, and of all the primitive ministers of the gospel, and command sinners immediately to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. The gospel is the appointed means for the conversion of sinners: it is both quick and powerful; it is like fire, and as a hammer, saith the Lord. If sinners, therefore, are ever made to feel their obligations to God as they ought, it is more likely to be when the blazing, burning truth of God is held up before their minds than at any other time; and now it is more reasonable to expect them to yield, and submit their hearts to God, than at any other time. If this part of doctrine, and this part of the sinner's duty, should become generally understood, and universally insisted on by all the ministers of the gospel, then, as in primitive times, conversions to God, under the preaching of the word, will be no rare and uncommon thing. May the Lord help all the ministers of his church, wisely to understand and handle this all important subject.

We fear many mistake the doctrine of Regeneration for morality, or reformation of life. Men may reform and live in a great measure a moral life, without the experience of a change of heart by true repentance toward God and faith in Christ Jesus. Morality, and baptism, and the profession of the Christian religion, may cleanse the outside of the cup and platter, or garnish the sepulchre; but to change the heart requires divine power. Many have a lamp, but no oil in their vessel, or the form of godliness without the power, and such are easy overcome by temptation or persecution. Then they will lose their faith and patience. But those who have the power of godliness, and form also, have lamps and oil in their vessels, and are the wise virgins. Wise virgins are the regenerated, having undergone a moral change, a real change, a universal change, a manifest change, a speedy change, a mysterious change, a divine change, a change of state, the bound man is made a free man, the alien becomes a citizen, the enemy becomes a friend, a change of nature takes place, the lion becomes a lamb, the vulture a dove.

Various definitions have been given of Regeneration, by different theologians, a few of which we will give.

Baxter says, "It is nature's reparation, elevation, and perfection" William Law: "Regeneration consists solely in the birth of the Son of God in the human soul." Whitherspoan says, "Regeneration is the reparation of the loss which man sustained by the fall." Griffin says: "It is a change of selfishness to universal love, from enmity against God to supreme attachment to him."

If, then, we are born of God's word, repentance, faith, water and the Spirit, we then will have a heart's desire to do his will, to observe all things he commanded: it will be our heart's desire to do his will, to obey him, whether he takes us to heaven or leaves us on earth. If the tree is good, the fruit will be good wherever God plants it. The thief on the cross was converted or regenerated by repentance and faith in the Lord Jesus, prepared to obey, or bear fruit, whether he takes him to heaven or leaves him on earth. We believe, that, if the thief had been let down from the cross, he would have kept all the commands of the Lord, as well as the other disciples; but he could not. Now there is a great difference between those that would not and those that could not: the one may be saved, and the other lost. Known and wilful disobedience is a sin, not pardoned without repentance and reformation; therefore, to the unconverted we say, lay away all prejudice against God, his word, and his people; ask yourself am I in Christ? am I humble and meek? Have I repented of my sins? Do I believe in Christ, or am I saying, "Away with this man"? or like the Jews of old, "He shall not reign over us?" or like Fellire, "Away for this time, when I have a convenient reason I will call for thee" Poor sinner, your reason is today. If you hear his voice, harden not your hearts. To day, what ardent love and zeal is due, while heaven stands open to our view. How soon mercy's door of heaven will be shut no one can tell. Therefore let the sinful and proud world go; come and take up thy cross, and follow Jesus, the light of the world.

DANIEL LONGANECKER.

DON'T COUNT THE STEPS.—It is, perhaps, well for us all that we do not count up in early life the number of steps, many of them weary ones, we shall have to take in treading the long road that reaches from the cradle to the grave. It is well for the young housewife that she does not estimate the number of millions of dishes she will be required to wash during a period of housekeeping forty years long; in each of which years the table must be cleared and the dishes washed over a thousand times. It is well that the poor seamstress does not calculate the number of miles of "seam and gusset and band, band and gusset and seam" her tired fingers must form, till the lamp of life, like the table lamp, gives out. It is wise and well that she, who sits from one year to another in the same little room, does not realize that her hand moves, in forming stitches, more miles than a steamship travels in cruising the Atlantic.

As the seaman, when he has set sail, goes to the helm and the compass, and sits still, and observes the sun, or the polar star, and how the ship works, and whether the landmarks form themselves right according to his chart; so do you, when you have been at prayer, mark your ship, how it makes the port, and what rich goods are laden back again from heaven. Most people lose their prayers in the mist and fog of non-observation.

For the COMPANION.

Judge Not.

"Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure you mete, it shall be meted to you again. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? * * * Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." Matth. 7: 1-5.

Pardon this long text. I intend it as part of my article.

Why do some men belong to the church which the brethren believe to be the true church of God? was suggested to my mind while reading the first article in No. 35, C. F. C., over the signature S. M. Minnich. If it be true that that the tree is known by the fruit it bears, and that by men's fruit we shall know them, then, from the tone and spirit of said article, it is manifest that the writer has no faith in nor sympathy for the church to which he seems to belong; and would be much nearer home in the one in which he learned his ideas of utilizing money. In the article referred to he developes his disapprobation of, and unbelief in the church to which he professes to belong, and in which he claims to be a preacher, in a tirade against her Annual Meetings; but those who know him know that his opposition does not stop here. But "Judge Not" heads this article. I proceed to notice the pretended cause for his tirade against A. M.

"How much will you give for the canvas tent?" was asked me yesterday. 'Nothing' I replied. 'Why?' 'Do not see the utility; I have read minutes with some care, and cannot see one article of the twenty-seven of any practical utility to the church." Then follows his criticism of the queries before last A. M., which, according to his judging, were of no practical utility to the church; and all is in justification of himself for not giving any of his money for the purchase of the contemplated canvas tent to hold A. M. in.

I turn back to No. 30, p. 467, under, "Lay not up for Yourself Treasure on Earth." In this S. M. Minnich says, "Not long since two brethren came some distance to labor for us in the word of truth. Surely we ought freely to offer them some of our perishable goods." "Thus believing two or three of us commenced soliciting aid for the two brethren. The second brother I asked for money had none to give;" (perhaps he did not see the practical utility of it) "yet the earthly possessions of this brother are fifteen or twenty thousand dollars. His wife died, leaving no heirs. He dresses very plain. He is zealous in attending to the commands and ordinances of Jesus, that he can obey without money; but the command of the Lord that says, 'Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth,' he disobeys every day of his life." Is this judging? or is it that charity that thinketh no evil? "He is old and feeble, and on the very brink of the grave. Notwithstanding these warning messengers of death, he holds his wealth for himself, with a death-like grasp. We talked to him as plainly as we knew how to talk; but our words made no impression on his covetous heart."

Brethren, here is a specimen of the fruit of the tree that denounces the A. M. What do you think of it? "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Ye shall know them by their fruit." Here we have a plain-dressed, zealous brother in the commands and ordinances of Jesus, denounced with covetousness, and holding his wealth for himself with a death-like grasp, simply because, under certain circumstances, and for a certain purpose, he refused to give his money. "WE talked to him as plainly as WE knew how to talk; but OUR words made NO impression on his covetous heart." Note, above the personal pronoun "I" is used: "The second brother I asked for money," Here the plurals we and our are used. I think it would be nearer truth to read My words made no impression; and if this be the correct reading, the knowing ones know why they did not.

All this slander and abuse is hurled against this plain, zealous old brother simply because he, under certain circumstances did not see the utility of giving his money. Now the accuser of this plain, zealous brother, is asked to give some of his money for what he seems not to see the utility of; but instead of charging his not giving to his covetous heart, and holding his wealth for himself with a death-like grasp, as he did the plain, zealous old brother, he charges it to the uselessness of the Annual Meeting. I will ask him two short questions, and leave himself and the reader judge; how near the scripture at the head of this article applies to the case under consideration.

1. When, on a former occasion, brethren came to the church in which you reside, and money was needed to defray expenses, how much did you then contribute?

2. On that occasion, did this plain, zealous old brother open his covetous heart and give ten dollars?

D. P. SAYLER.

The Last of the Jewish Sabbaths.

"The Sabbath was past." Mark xvi.: 1.

BY REV. E. K. SMALL.

The Sabbath was past, and the women were hastening to the sepulchre with the sweet spices, that they may anoint the body of Jesus. They had beheld where he was laid, in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, and then "they returned and prepared spices and ointments." Having done this, "they rested the Sabbath according to the commandment." That Sabbath, though a day of rest, was to them a day of sorrow. Not in songs of praise, but in weeping and sadness would the hours pass by.

But "the Sabbath was past," and they go to perform for their Master and Friend this last sad office of love. Nothing now could be done for him but anoint his dead body, and with the eager desire of tender affection they come to fulfil their purpose. They come "very early in the morning, at the rising of the sun," and their eagerness makes them forgetful of all difficulties; not till they had almost reached the grave did the question occur, "Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?" They expected to find the body, the Lord's body lying lifeless in the tomb.

But the "Sabbath was past," and therefore Jesus was not there. He, too, had rested on the seventh day from his work of redemption, as God had rested on the seventh day from the work of creation. Jesus would not quickly pass the grave but he would lie there, and consecrate it for his people. But that day of rest being past, he comes forth from the tomb to dispel the sorrow of his weeping disciples, and pour a new flood of light and joy into their hearts. As on creation's first day, God said, "Let there be light," and the darkness which brooded over the deep was dispelled, so on this first day, the Prince of Life rises victorious over the powers of darkness, conquering death and the grave, and shedding a wondrous light on those hitherto gloomy regions; from that day ascends the triumphant cry, "O, death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory?"

"The Sabbath was past." And, oh what a Sabbath had it been to the sorrowful, desponding disciples. They had trusted that this was he who should have redeemed Israel; but he had been crucified and buried, and their hopes were buried with him in the tomb. "To-day is the third day since these things were done." Their enemies and His were triumphing; they had made sure of their prey, the tomb was secured, they had sealed the stone and had set a watch, that there might be no possibility of escape. His enemies remembered that it had been said, that he would rise again on the third day, but His friends seemed to forget this. How was it that they did not recall what he had so lately said to them: "A little while, and ye shall not see me, and again a little while, and ye shall see me." "Ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy." Does it seem strange to us that the disciples did not expect the resurrection of their Lord, after all that he had said to them about it? and do we sometimes wonder at their doubts and fears while he was yet with them? Yet surely we should much rather be astonished at our own misgivings, at our own weakness of faith, for we have the benefit of their experience, the benefit of their doubts, and we have the certain knowledge of those three great facts which had not then transpired—the Resurrection, the Ascension, and the descent of the Holy Spirit. We have an ever accumulating cloud of witness to the truth of Christianity, and yet how timid are we still, how feeble is our faith!

Yes, if we would justly estimate the faith of these first Christians, we must place ourselves in their position, and not judge them from our own. They had indeed been doubting disciples, slow of heart to believe, for not only had Christianity not yet received its crowning proofs, but there were strong national prejudices to overcome; they were expecting a Savior who would restore the outward glory of Israel, and how could the events which they had witnessed be reconciled with such expectations? No wonder if hope with them were well nigh extinguished: He lies dead in the silent grave, and, as yet, the Spirit was not given to them, bringing back to their remembrance, with new light and understanding, the words which Jesus had spoken. No; it was still night in the souls of the disciples; day was dawning on the earth, not yet had it dawned in the hearts of these sad ones.

"The Sabbath was past." What a Sabbath that had been in Jerusalem. In that doomed city were assembled the enemies of Christ; they had plotted together, they had planned and carried out their murderous scheme, and now on the quiet Sabbath, how did that deed of blood appear to their consciences? Could they calmly survey the events of the preceding day? What did Pilate think and feel, who had given up Jesus to be crucified, knowing that he had done nothing amiss? What were the feelings of the deriding rulers and the scoffing soldiers? What the feelings of those who suborned witnesses, and of those who were suborned? What the feelings of the multitude who had cried, "Away with this man, release unto us Barabbas." Ah, surely on that day many a heart was tortured with remorse, if not broken with godly sorrow.

"The Subbath was past" and that Sabbath had doubtless been a day of Satanic triumph. The work of darkness seemed complete when the Savior was laid in the silent tomb. But the day now was dawning, whose light would scatter the host of darkness, and shake the kingdom of the prince of this world.

"The Sabbath was past," and the first great event, after it was past, was witnessed by no human eye; only the angels were permitted to be spectators of that solemn, that glorious event. "Seen of angels believed on in the world, received up into glory." The disciples saw the ascension of their Lord, but his resurrection they might not see. Of this fact they must be first informed through the hearing of the ear, through the ministry of angels. The angels were the blessed messengers to announce to the disciples the glorious fact of which they were soon to have other evidence. This was a day of jubilee in heaven; the angelic choirs sang their triumphant song, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive blessing and honor and glory and power." The heavens bowed down; the angels ascended and descended on the Son of Man; bright as the morning, radiant as light, they came ministering to the risen Savior; they linger on the spot where his sacred body had lain; they roll away the stone; and with fullness of joy they tell his disciples the joyful news; not in hasty words and with quick departure, but they delight to tarry and talk with the women of these things. Their very words have a triumphant sound: "He is not here, he is risen; come see the place where the Lord lay."

"The Sabbath was past," and with it passed away forever the seventh-day Sabbath. Henceforth the day of the resurrection of the Lord is the day of rest for his people. As he rose from the dead on the first day, so the first day is the Lord's day, evermore consecrated to his worship till he comes again.

"The Sabbath was past." Soon will all our earthly Sabbaths be past; and, if we be followers of the Lord Jesus, we shall sleep with him, resting from our earthly labors in the grave which he has hallowed for his people; there the weary are at rest; and this Sabbath will be followed by a joyful waking on the morning of the resurrection. "In the third day he will raise up, and we shall live in his sight." That glorious Sabbath shall begin which will know no end; "there remaineth a rest for the people of God." As Jesus rose from the dead, so must all his people. He the first fruits, afterwards they that are his. Are we his? It is to those who are his that the promise of Sabbattic rest, is given. They who are sharers now in his death, will hereafter be in his resurrection. Amen.

—People's Literary Companion.

For the Companion

Is Baptism Essential?

Having a just cause to become offended by hearing baptism pronounced not essential, it constrained me to state my thoughts to the readers of the C. F. C. Attending service in a certain church, the minister surprised me by saying, that baptism, by immersion is unnecessary. While listening to his discourse, I observed that he pronounced the gospel a liar, while he has the hope in his heart of being presented with a starry crown—a crown of never-fading glory. He also said, that we are not justified by immersion, but by faith. He had forgotten that faith without works is dead. We are commanded to repent, and to believe, and be baptized. I am not a member of any church, and consequently I am favorable to all. If such ministers can lead persons into darkness, I can only say, it is the blind leading the blind.

"But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that brought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction." From your little friend,

Carrie L. Roelkey.

New Market, Md.

For the Companion.

Offenses, Public and Private.

How to proceed in case one member trespasses against another, is a matter not much disputed. The Savior said, "Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican." Matth. 18: 15—17.

We ask the kind reader to consider, with us, those public offenses that will occasionally take place. For instance, such as superfluity, in all its various forms; having upon our bodies, and in our possession, things that are highly esteemed among men: also other transgressions, such as bad conduct in public assemblies. All these, and many other things, we term public offenses, and it is the privilege of the church, and not one or two members, to set those matters right. When we say church, we mean the general brotherhood. Please hear the apostle Paul on the subject—"Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear." 1 Tim. 5: 20. The apostle here doubtless has direct reference to those persons who transgress publicly the principles of the church. To reconcile, or to settle such a case in the presence of but one or two members, would be as improper as to ask but one or two members if they knew of any reason why a person may not become a member of the church by baptism, at such time as the church is assembled. Such power is invested on the church, and not a few individuals only. We are aware that our views will differ from those of many professors of the Christian religion; however, this should not make us shrink from duty; if God be for us, who can harm us?

MOSES FRAME.

Elkhart, Ind.

For the COMPANION.

Is This Right?

At our last council it was agreed upon that no sister should be permitted a seat at the communion table without a cap on her head; and we have a sister here, who has a husband, who is offended at the church, and will not suffer her to wear a cap. He says it is just an old Jewish custom—that the hair is given her for a covering. Now must the sister be deprived of the communion on this account? I do think, if the older sisters could bear a little more with the younger, and entreat them kindly, and pray for them, it would have a better influence. We should not be so ready to condemn; for while we condemn others, they may see something in us that they think is just as wrong. Now will not a plain, white bonnet fulfil the command as well as some of the little caps that are worn? I am indeed pained at the thought of such a decision; for while the young sisters are placed in such limited measures, some of the brethren who gave their assent to it had their heads trimmed and combed in the fashion, and were otherwise dressed as the world: yet they were overlooked, as if they were all right. If the young sisters should dress as the elder sisters, to be known, I think the brethren ought to dress in such a way that they can be known too. We may give ourselves much trouble about very little things, and neglect the weightier matters. It is so easy to see wrong in others; but when we go to lay burdens on others, we ought to be very careful, for it is said that every one shall bear his own burden. I would like to see a little more forbearance on the part of the young sisters, and let the Bishops look a little more to their own side of the house, and perhaps they will become more consistent. I am not young: I am old, and have never been reproved on account of pride—I despise it; but I do think the brethren are a little too hard on our young sisters, and allow the brethren too much liberty. I would like to see them all more Christ-like.

From your weak and unworthy sister, MARY KAUFFMAN.

Walnut, Pa.

For the COMPANION.

Help for the Needy.

I have all my life been a friend of Christianity, and for several years have been trying to live a Christian life. I have always been anxious to lend a helping hand to the work of our blessed Jesus, but being ever bound by the fetters of poverty, I have never been able to accomplish much in his vineyard, yet I have endeavored to cast in the widow's mite. I am now so situated in life that I have not even a mite to cast in. I have for some time been asking myself if I could not do some good by encouraging those who have the ability to work. I do not know that I can tell my readers anything that they do not know, for I feel my own weakness and ignorance so perceptibly that I am almost persuaded to bury my talent if I have any; but when I remember the consequence of this, I must make an effort to improve my talent, although it be a great cross.

I have never written a word for publication; as I have never had the advantages of education and means that others have had, I have felt that I was not competent; but since I see an all-important duty,—a duty than which there is none other more strictly enjoined upon us by our great High Priest,—so much neglected by those who speak and write for the public, I feel constrained to try to say a few words to all whom it may concern, to stir them up by way of remembrance. This duty is the one which we owe to the poor among our fellow creatures, whether of the same party or denomination or not—our brothers in the human family.

Behold what blessings are pronounced in the Word of God upon those that pity the poor and relieve their distress; and what curses are pronounced upon those who lay up for themselves treasures upon earth and heed not the cries of suffering humanity! "He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he has given will he pay him again." Prov. 19: 17. "Repay him again," when? in this life? Yes, we may say he will; for although we may never recognize the returned blessing, we may receive it in many ways. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies. The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: thou wilt make all his bed in sickness." Psalms, 41: 1–3. What language could express, or describe, greater blessings than these, which David declares we shall receive in this present life?

How often has our blessed Jesus commanded us to perform this duty, both from his own mouth and by his holy apostles. "Give to him that asketh thee; and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." Matth. 5: 42. "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Luke 14: 13, 14. We could refer to many other such commands, as 1 John 3: 17; 4: 20, 21; Luke 6: 38. Are not these sufficient to prove, that, if our heart is right, we will not neglect this duty? Let us contemplate the promised blessings, and also the consequence if we disobey; for "with the same measure that ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

By what rule shall we determine whether we are able to relieve the wants of our fellow creatures, and when they are more needy than ourselves? when we have plenty in store for years to come? That great prophet, John the Baptist, would not teach us this; but when the people asked, what they should do, he said unto them, "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise." So we see, if we have enough of this world's goods to supply our present wants, we should not withhold more from the poor sufferer.

Do you inquire where these poor are to be found, and how you are to know their wants? You will not have to search in the dark and dusky garrets of the crowded city, nor in the pauper's home. Do you not know some poor, careworn man, who has been all his lifetime in bondage to poverty? He has no home for his wife and little ones. Out of his daily wages, (which are often earned while he endures some torturing pain,) he has a high rent to pay, or forfeit a shelter for his family. He has his fuel to pay for, without which they would suffer from hunger and cold. He has all the numberless indispensible necessaries of his family to supply. Do you see them attend church? If not, do you inquire the cause? Perhaps with all the effort he can make he is unable to clothe them all respectably to go into company. He has started down hill and every body he meets gives him a kick. He can only buy coal and wood by one dollar's worth, and pay fifty cents to have it delivered. If he could buy five dollars worth it would be delivered free. He can only buy a few pounds of meat at once, for which he pays fifteen cents per pound; if he could only buy more at once he could get it for ten cents: and just so with everything he has to buy. So he is bound and cannot escape. Suppose several of his neighbors give or loan him all they can spare, what a great load it will lift from his shoulders. How his poor wife and little ones will bless you! perhaps he can soon repay you, and also be able to relieve others whom he sees suffering as he once did.

Mothers do you realize what great comfort you have—what great privileges and pleasures you enjoy—which the heart of the poor widow is a stranger to? God has seen fit to take from her side that beloved companion to whom she looked for comfort and happiness. This has caused within her breast an aching void the world can never fill. She toils from early morn until you are slumbering in your bed at night. Has she not darling little children? Do they have the comforts and pleasures which your children have? Do they attend church and Sabbath-school? Do you teach your children to love them and try to make them happy? Jesus loves them. O let us look after them and assist their poor mother in training them for him.

Do you not know some poor man who is trying to preach the gospel of Christ? Perhaps he has not the education necessary to teach acceptably. Is he not dependent on his daily labor for a support for his family? What time he has to devote to study to inform himself in the riches of the word of God? If you go to hear him preach, you expect him to interest you. He is not preaching for pay, does not expect it, so we should be very careful not to expect too much from him. We know what he needs. Can we not supply his wants, and none but God and the angels know who did it? Let us make that poor man one of the objects of our pity, and assist him, so that he will not have to appear before his congregation on the Sabbath so much wearied, both in body and mind, that he is unable to interest any one, and both he and his people go home dissatisfied and discouraged. We all know the danger of riches. Is there not also danger in extreme poverty? I doubt not but many souls now eternally lost took the first wrong step because of poverty. O, if I could be the means of making one poor heart glad through this life and happy in eternity, it would repay me for all that I could write in a lifetime.

O, our Father in Heaven, impress these feeble words on the hearts of those who may see them; and may we all one day hear thee say, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me, enter ye into the joy of your Lord." JULI J. FUIREL.

The Half-Way Place.

"John," said the teacher, "have you found the beloved disciple's place in Jesus' bosom? Are you with him to-day?"

John's eyes and glad smile said even more than his "I hope so."

"And Fred, how is it with you?"

"I guess if there is any half-way place I'm there," said Fred, who had been halting some time between Christ and the world.

"How long do you mean to stay there?"

"I don't know. I can't get any farther."

"Ah, you mistake. Where is the half-way place? Where would it have been to the prodigal had he stopped there? Still a long way from home. No father in sight. No home near. No food. No clothes. No fatted calf. No golden ring. The feast not made. He never would have heard those precious words, "My son was lost and is found.' He would still have been lost. Half-way home would have been no better than the far country. But there is no half-way place. Half a Christian is still a sinner. Half-way to heaven is nowhere near the pearly gates. Half-way to Christ is still on Satan's ground, for 'he that is not with me is against me.' Christ wants your whole heart or none."

"Do you like half-way friends?"

"No; I despise them."

"Do you suppose Christ wishes such friends? Do not stop any longer where you are. If the Lord be God, serve him; if Baal, follow him."

"The half-way place, if such there be, is Satan's favorite ground."

Newspapers in the Family.

Who cannot afford one cent a day for good reading matter for his family? Yet, practically, many men say that they cannot, while, at the same time, they are expending on themselves five cents, ten cents, or more, and some much more, every day, to feed some gross and expensive appetite, entirely selfish, admitting no willing participation on the part of wife and children. But, while he revolts at the idea of drawing them into his pernicious habits, let him not withhold from them that which administers to his moral and intellectual wants, and tends to elevate them in the scale of being.

In this age of cheap printing, when editions of valuable works can be bought at an extremely low price, there is hardly any man, who is a man, that could not procure for his family some books. But newspapers cost still less, and are within the reach of all. A good weekly paper, containing both religious and secular matter, is what a family needs. A business man, whose position is such as to make it profitable to take a journal for the current news of the day, the markets, &c., can scarcely be unable to add the family weekly paper for his loved ones at home. The man who neglects this duty—for it is a sacred duty—does not reflect as he ought, and consider the responsibilities that rest upon him.—Banner of Peace.

Always do as the sun does—look on the bright side of things, for, while it is just as cheap, it is three times as good for digestion.

Sweet are the thoughts that savor of content.—Greene.

Learn to make others happy.—Shelly

For the Companion.

Four Servants of Satan.

My dear young friends:

Satan has a great many servants, and they are very busy, running about doing all the harm they can. I know four of them, and some of the mischief which they have done. I found out their names, and I want to put you on your guard against them; for they are very sly. They will pretend to be your best friends. They appear to be sociable, easy, good-natured, and not too much in a hurry. They seem to wait your own good time, and entice you when you least expect it. "Oh, we want you to enjoy yourselves," they say, "and not be so particular." And the arguments they use are very taking; at least I must think so; since so many of the young and old listen to them, and are led away by them. And all, I believe, is because they did not know, in the first place, who was speaking to them. They were deceived. They did not see it was Satan's uniform they had on.

Do you ask for their names? Here they are: "There 's no danger." That is one. "Only this once." That is another. "Everybody does so," is the third; and "By and by," is the fourth.

If you are tempted to stay away from God's house, and break the Sabbath-day by loafing at home, or talking to your neighbors, or talking about them, and "Only this once" or "Everybody does so," whispers at your elbow, know it is false.

The great evil of one sin is, that you will be likely to go on sinning; for there is not half so much to stop you as there was to prevent you from setting out at first. Hold no parley with "Only this once" or "Everybody does so." Listen to their dangerous counsels, no, not for a moment.

Are you thinking seriously about the welfare of your soul? Has the Holy Spirit fastened upon your conscience the solemn warnings of a faithful teacher, and brought to mind a tender mother's prayers for your conversion? Does the tear start in your eyes? and are you almost persuaded to choose Christ, and that better part which cannot be taken from you? That is a moment when "By and by" hovers near to snatch your confidence and persuade you to put away serious things. It succeeded with poor Felix: when Paul preached to him, and the Roman ruler was "almost persuaded" to become a Christian, "By and by" whispered in his ear. He put off his soul's salvation to a "convenient season," and it never came.

"By and by" is a cheat as well as a liar. By putting you off, he means to cheat your soul of heaven. God says, "Now is the accepted time, and the day of salvation." He never asks you to postpone it. He makes no promises and no provisions for "By and by."

Dear friends, be on your guard against these four servants of Satan, in little things as well as in great ones, for their only aim is to harm and ruin you.

L. A. Engle.

Duncansville, Pa.

For the Companion.

Music.

Where is the Christian who does not love music?

Did you ever sit in the twilight of evening, and listen to the loud, rustling music of the Balm of Gilead, or the more gentle tones of the soft hissing of the Lombardy Poplar, without being incited to think and feel that there is a God in nature? To the pure-hearted Christian there is music in almost everything God has made.

> There 's music in the mountain,
> There 's music in the air;
> There 's music in the true heart;
> There 's music everywhere.

Sometimes we are laid on a couch of sickness, and when our languid spirit cannot longer hear nature's music, how pleasant to hear the soft, solemn notes of the organ gently pealing in melodious tones some Christian song, (which has frequently soothed and calmed the weary nature of your humble servant). Many times has my soul been drawn out in holy aspirations to God, while tears of gratitude, in anticipation of the fulfilment of God's promises, have rolled down my careworn cheek, while listening to the sweet song of Christian Hope, sung and played by the young.

But there is another reason why we love instrumental music. We can have instrumental music when all nature seems to be silent, except the chill, howling wind, which seems to have more of terror than music in it; then the family can form a circle around the instrument and sing in tones which tend to ennoble and purify—raise heavenward—the ties which bind our hearts together here, and make us long to unite in an unbroken family above. Music of this kind enhances holy feelings, and tends to lessen vice. And my opinion is, that many young men who have been once dissipated and vicious, could have been saved by the proper use of an instrument in the family. In a large family, if the use of tea, coffee, tobacco, and a few other unnecessaries were dispensed with, the amount would, in a short time, be sufficient to buy an instrument; and the health of both body and soul be made better thereby.

Then let us say in the language of David, the sweet singer of Israel, "Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous! Praise the Lord with harp! Sing unto Him with psaltery and an instrument of ten strings! Sing unto Him a new song! and play skilfully with a loud noise!" Ps. 33. "Upon an instrument of ten strings, and upon the psaltery, upon the harp, with solemn sound." Ps. 92: 3. Some say, "Bad music can be made with an instrument:" So "bad music" can be made with the human voice.

S. E. Kepner.

Religion—Natural and Revealed.

BY REV. J. WEAVER.

There is not, as some may have supposed, a contradiction between natural and revealed religion. They are not two essentially different religious. There is nothing in revealed religion which is directly or indirectly contrary to the light of nature or right reason. Because there are some things in it which are above reason, is no evidence that it is contrary to it. It simply proposes to reveal things relative to duty and truth which would not, and could not, have been known without it. It matters not to what extent the world may have been benefitted by what is usually defined as a natural religion; it does not follow that reason alone, in the present state of mankind, or at any time in the past history of nations, could or would have furnished sufficient light to guide men in the true knowledge of God and his moral government.

It is not just for men to take their estimate of the power and effect of human reason from those parts where revealed religion does and has existed for a long time. They should go where it is not, and never was. Now, if there is enough in human reason to properly impress the heart and mind with what duty is, why might not a Chinese draw up as good a system of natural religion as a Christian can? "Take Confucius, Zoroaster, Plato, Socrates, or the greatest moralist that ever lived without the light of revelation, and it will appear that their best systems of morality were intermixed and blended with much superstition."

Admirers of natural religion should injustice confine themselves wholly to the power of human reason, unaided by any direct revelation from God. It cannot be tested by any systems formed by persons living in ages and countries where the Bible is or has been. They should go outside of its influences altogether. Some very fine schemes of natural religion have been drawn up by Christian divines and philosophers, in which they have comprehended most of the important truths contained in revealed religion. This is all very well, but could they have attained to it by the power of human reason alone? Original truth is not so easily wrought out of the mine as men are sometimes want to think. Most of the ancient philosophers made pathetic complaints of human ignorance, and the difficulties they found in searching after truth. The best philosophers of Greece did not pretend to set up merely upon their own discoveries, but they travelled into Egypt and different parts of the East to gain knowledge.

The scoffing infidel of to-day boasts of natural religion, when, in reality, every moral excellency that is contained in it is the outgrowth of revealed religion. What native and original truths have any of them wrought out of the mine? Where did they derive their knowledge of God, his attributes and moral government? The vast majority of the ancient philosophers were pantheists. There never was a single person of the human race that arrived at a correct knowledge of God by the mere exercise of his rational powers.

Christian divines may divide religion into as many parts as they please. They may, if they choose, call one part natural and the other revealed religion, but they are only parts of the whole. And, although perhaps it may not be in harmony with the generally received opinion, I must be permitted to express my doubts whether, strictly speaking, there is or can be any such thing as natural religion. Natural religion, as defined at present, implies "that knowledge, regeneration, and love of God, and the practice of those duties to him, our fellow-creatures, and ourselves, which are discoverable by the exercise of our rational faculties." But to what extent are these things discoverable by the mere exercise of our rational faculties? It is obvious that those nations that were destitute of a divine revelation never did arrive at a proper knowledge of God. They had as many gods as there are stars in the heavens. They knew nothing about the proper worship of God. Some worshiped beasts, birds, serpents, and some an unknown God. They knew nothing definitely of the fall of man, and his recovery from sin. They were uncertain about the the immortality of the soul, and knew nothing about the resurrection of the body and future rewards and punishments. The very best of them were guilty of such terrible vices that we are left in doubt as to whether they believed even the little of morality they occasionally taught. It is in evidence, also, that what little they knew about God and his moral government, was gathered more from tradition than from nature itself. I would not be understood as saying that no part of the truth is capable of a proof purely rational—for it certainly is—but that this truth was not originated by the mere exercise of the rational faculties. From the light of nature we can demonstrate the truth that there was a First Cause, and that that First Cause must have been intelligent; for we see marks of design all around us. But if we would have been left to ourselves from infancy, in a desert world, it is not at all probable that we would ever have made one theological discovery.

It is not possible for us, at this remote period, to tell precisely how the pagan philosophers obtained their notions of God and morality. Two things are very plain, however: According to their own sayings, they relied strongly upon tradition; also, that their philosophy was vastly improved after the introduction of Christianity. If they would have been left wholly to the exercise of their own rational faculties, without the advantage of tradition, and in later times without the light of Christianity, their systems would have been far more objectionable than they are at present.

Men of the nineteenth century can talk flippantly about natural religion,—the power and excellency of human reason, together with the wonderful discoveries men have made by the mere exercise of their rational faculties,—when all they know about God and morality they have gathered from the light of revealed religion. Dr. Leland says: "It would not be easy to mention any nation among whom any true knowledge of religion has been preserved, concerning which we can be assured that they never had any benefit from the light of divine revelation; and that the principles of religious truth and duty which were found among them were originally the mere product of natural reason, without any higher assistance.

Whatever men may say against revealed religion, and however offensive it may be to their pride of human reason to ask them to accept of it as truth, one thing is certain—there is nothing in it contrary to reason. How is it that those living in Christian lands have more reasonable views of God, his moral government, and the nature of true worship, than even the wisest among the pagan philosophers had? "It would argue great arrogance in us to suppose that we had a more comprehensive reach of thought, greater penetration and force of reason, than those sublime geniuses, which have been the admiration of all succeeding ages." The only reasonable answer that can be given is this: We have the light and influence of divine revelation.

"Fancy, hope, and conscience could not prove
A future state, without the work of God.
This is Hope's charter, this gives Fancy power,
And this arms conscience with authority:
This party lifts the veil which else had hung
Before our eyes, concealing from our view
The spirit-land."

145 Scott Street, Baltimore, Md.

Selected by M. A. Riggle.

Moral Courage in Every Day Life.

"Moral Courage" was printed in large letters, and put as the caption of the following items, and placed in a conspicuous place.

Have the courage to discharge a debt while you have the money in your pocket.

Have the courage to do without that which you do not need, however much your eyes may covet it.

Have the courage to speak your mind when it is necessary that you should do so, and hold your tongue when it is prudent you should do so.

Have the courage to speak to a friend in a "seedy" coat, even though you are in company with a rich one and richly attired.

Have the courage to own you are poor, and thus disarm poverty of its sharpest sting.

Have the courage to tell a man why you refuse to credit him.

Have the courage to tell a man why you will not lend him your money.

Have the courage to cut the most agreeable acquaintance you have, when you are convinced that he lacks principle; a friend should bear with a friend's infirmities, but not with his vices.

Have the courage to show your respect for honesty, in whatever guise it appears, and your contempt for dishonesty and duplicity, by whomsoever exhibited.

Have the courage to wear your old clothes until you can pay for new ones.

Have the courage to prefer comfort and propriety to fashions in all things.

Have the courage to acknowledge your ignorance, rather than seek for knowledge under false pretenses.

Have the courage in providing an entertainment for your friends not to exceed your means.

Have the courage to insure the property in your possession, and thereby pay your debts in full.

Have the courage to obey your Maker at the risk of being ridiculed by man.

For the COMPANION.

The Modern Korah, Dathan and Abiram.

"Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy; every one of them; and the Lord is among them: wherefore then lift up yourselves above the congregation of the Lord." Num. 16: 3.

The above text presents itself to our mind very frequently in reading articles in our worthy paper—the COMPANION, wherein the writers very frequently complain as though the way was made too narrow, the church door so strait, the cross so heavy and the yoke of Jesus so rough by the councils of men, that the people of this weak and feeble generation are hardly able to bear the burden thereof; and they complain, Why is it? or ask whether our ministers, our councils and Yearly Meetings are not taking too much upon themselves, seeing the congregation is holy, and the Lord is among them. "Wherefore, then, do you lift yourselves up above the congregation of the Lord, by binding so many peculiarities together, and laying them on our shoulders, which neither we nor our children are able to bear?"

Some think if these foolish peculiarities were done away with, then, the Church would flourish far more and better; and many souls might be brought to the fold of Christ and live, who otherwise are too timid and weak to engage in such a sternly regulated vineyard, and consequently stay outside, starve and perish, for the want of more tenderness towards them on the part of the Church Here we must answer and say, Yes, surely, many, very many, might be brought into the Church who are outside, if the Church would remove the one great peculiarity, that they might come into the Church without being born again—that they could just step over and receive the name of brother or sister, and then let them go on, in their daily walks of life as before:—let the proud go on in their pride, the indolent in their indolence, the covetous in their covetousness, the haughty in their haughtiness, the tippler in his tippling, and those who hold offices in the kingdom of the world hold them, as they did before. We say, if this all were allowed in the Church, it would become as prosperous as the days of which the Prophet predicted, wherein "Seven women shall cleave to one man, saying, we will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel, only let us be called by thy name." So, many would come into the church! They would make their own laws and judgments therein, if only they could be called by its name.

But lo! where would the Church be then? Would it not be out in the stream of popularity as well as any other? As regards peculiarities, read Titus 2: 14, concerning Jesus, "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a Peculiar people, zealous of good works." The Lord wants a peculiar people—separated from the world; and people cannot well be peculiar, without having peculiarities about them.

We have heard some railing at ministers for speaking too plainly and too hard to the unconverted, fearing that thereby they might take offence and become affronted at the Brethren, and it might be a cause that they would never join in with us. Now, by this we predict that we are in the times which the apostle said would come, "when men will not endure sound doctrine," and, that they would "heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears," who would speak as would be pleasing to the hearers. But what, then, is the plaudit given to those ministers who thus speak? "Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets."

We have frequently said, and are constrained to say it again, that, if we must carry sinners into the church on downy beds of popularity, or spring cushioned stools, we had better leave them where they are: better not have any meat at all, than a world full of filthy and putrid matter. Let us be careful, lest we share the same fate as did the ancient Korah and all those who adhered to him. We will here tell you against what they rebelled. "The Lord commanded Moses to speak unto the children of Israel, and bid them that they make them fringes in the borders of their garments, throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringes of the borders a ribband of blue." Now comes what it was for: "and it shall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the Lord, and do them (not only remember them, but also do them) and that ye seek not after your own heart and your own eyes, after which ye used to go a whoring." Numb. 15: 38, 39. In the following chapter you can see the penalty, and what befel the rebellious, Korah and his colleagues.

Now those fringes, and ribands of blue, were of no more account in their days, perhaps, than caps, non-conformity to the world, the resigning of public offices, &c., are in our day. The fringes and ribands had their signification, and so have these latter things a signification of propriety to a Christian.

It is true, there are some things discussed at our Annual Meetings which, perhaps, are of little value to the soul; but we ask, Who is to blame? Is it the annual council, or is it those members who give rise to and send in such strife-gendering questions? Let us all try to be of one mind in Christ, and all speak the same things; and then these jarrings and discords will cease. Do what Paul commands Timothy—"Shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness." "Flee also youthful lusts; follow after righteousness, faith, charity, peace with them that call on (the name of) the Lord out of a pure heart." "But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes; and the servants of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men." This know also, that we are in the days in which men and women are lovers of their own selves more than of God—"covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient, accusers, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

In conclusion, we will say, let us ever weigh ourselves by the good Book. Let us ever try to find fault with ourselves instead of with our neighbors. Let us work in meekness and fear, and all will be well in the day of the Lord.

L. ANDES.

Lincoln, Pa.

Dare to change your mind, confess your error, and alter your conduct, when you are convinced you are wrong.

Innocence is a flower which withers when touched, but blooms not again, though washed by tears.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Sept. 30, 1873.

Editorial Correspondence.

PHILADELPHIA, PA. }
Sept. 16, 1873. }

Sister Eliza Beachley, our daughter Anna, and ourself, arrived at this city, on last Thursday morning, 11th inst. We had spent a few hours very pleasantly, in the evening, at the house of our brother A. B. Brumbaugh, M. D., in Huntingdon, so as to take a train that would land us in the city after daylight. Dr. B. and family hospitably entertained us, and sent us on our way rejoicing.

Here we were met by Elder Jacob Spanogle, and conducted to his home, No. 4042, Powelton Avenue, where we are making our home, and where we are now writing. We are being entertained with unmerited kindness.

Until Sunday our time was devoted to pleasure and business interviews of the numerous wonders of this wonderful city, some of which we may notice in future papers.

On Sunday morning we met with the Brethren of Philadelphia, at their new meeting-house, which was first opened for public worship on this day. This fact had been published and consequently there was quite a large assemblage. It is situated on Marshall street, between Girard Avenue and Poplar street, a very convenient place for the members, and in a good locality for a church. The house is constructed of brick, and is 42x69 feet in size. First, it has a good seven foot cellar. Then a ten foot basement, which is finished up for Sunday-school and lecture purposes. It is divided into three apartments: lecture room, infant class, and Bible class rooms. The audience room is on the second floor, and is large, and pleasant, being eighteen feet high, and having light and ventilation on three sides. The entire building is substantially, but very plainly put up, and we have not a word of fault to find with it. It appears to us to be just right, and becoming for a Brethren's meeting-house, in the city of Philadelphia. Of course such a house would not be in place in the rural districts of the western states, where the Brethren could not afford to build it and the wants of the people would not require it. Brother Grabill Meyers says, "Our meeting-houses should compare with our dwelling-houses. If we are poor, and it is required that we live in common houses, sparsely furnished, it should not be expected that our meeting-houses should be much better. But if the Lord has blessed us with means by which we could adorn our own homes, we ought to make our meeting-houses to compare with them, especially so far as comfort is concerned."

To return, the house is furnished with plain carpets and mattings. A platform, three steps high, is erected for the preachers' desk, which is a plain desk, about five feet long. The platform is large enough, and provided with seats for half a dozen or more preachers. On the same lot they have a good dwelling-house, supplied with a large cooking range, which has been supplied with a view of supplying the eatables on lovefeast occasions. These are then conveyed into the audience room by a dumb waiter, (or elevator) and they are taken out, from a door aside of the minister's stand. This dwelling contains ten rooms, and brings four hundred dollars a year rent. It is occupied by a brother who is janitor, and receives two hundred dollars a year for his services.

On Sunday forenoon the house was quite full, a number of persons occupying the gallery, over the vestibule, which is also supplied with seats. A number of the ministering brethren were present, Isaac Price, Jacob K. Riner, Jacob Rinehold, Robeson Hyde, and Grabill Meyers, and some others from adjoining congregations. Brother Price preached, and brother Riner assisted. The services were interesting and edifying, and the attention very good. At the close of the meeting brother Spanogle stated that the entire cost of the building, including the furnishing of the house, and the dwelling-house, was about twenty-three thousand dollars. They realized thirteen thousand dollars from their old house. A collection was then taken, from which about thirteen hundred dollars were obtained.

In the evening brother Riner preached, to the acceptance of a large congregation, nearly as large as the forenoon attendance. We dined at brother J. L. Fry's, and supped at brother Silas Thomas's.

On Monday we attended council meeting at the old Germantown meeting-house. Brethren Price, Riner, and Gotwaltz, presided, and brethren Grabill Meyers, C. Custer, and Jacob T. Meyers, assisted. Some church difficulties were discussed, and it is hoped a way was opened by which they may be removed. Difficulties have arisen between several of the members which threatened to create great disturbance in the church, but it is now expected they will either agree to agree in the church or to disagree outside of the church. The meeting was continued until about three o'clock. Whether it will result profitably to the church at Germantown is a matter which time and eternity will reveal, but to ourself and others the occasion of our being there, and its results, is a matter of rejoicing. By visiting the graves of the fathers, attending the services and deliberations of the brethren, and the operation of the Good Spirit of the Lord, our daughter was constrained to give her heart to the Lord. Her resolution was made known, and as nobody forbade water, she was baptized, and received into the church. The occasion was entirely unexpected to us.

After the meeting we took refreshment at the house of sister Lehman, and after the baptism returned to Philadelphia, and attended evening meeting, and listened to an excellent discourse by brother Isaac Price. Brother Jacob Reinhold also made remarks in German. The congregation was very much smaller than at former meetings, but the attention was good.

On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings we were not present, but our reporter informs us that the attendance was about as that of Monday evening. Brother Grabill Meyers preached on both occasions. The brethren expect to continue the meetings at least until over next Sunday, and longer if the prospects advise.

Our visit has been a very pleasant one, and we are enjoying it very much.

Answers to Correspondents.

C. ROYER.—We have no hymn from you on the Church in its Purity. We have an attempt at poetry writing on that subject, by another party; but as we cannot discover in it the loveliness you speak of, either in sentiment or poetic expression, it probably is not what you refer to.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Query.

Will some one give his views on the 14th verse of the 13th chapter of Mark: "But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet standing where it ought not?" The query is of a three-fold nature: What is the abomination? who are the desolate? and where is it to stand where it ought not? Is it in the church of Christ, or is it among the popular Christianity? Some think it is the latter, while others say, "How fast the prophecies of Daniel are coming to fulfilment!" when they hear of so much controversy among the brethren everywhere, the C. F. C. not excepted.

Matthew 24th chapter, 15th verse says: "Stand in the holy place." 12th verse, "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold; but he that endureth unto the end, the same shall be saved." This seems to be in the church of Christ. But as there is a difference of opinions among the brethren and sisters, and the matter is not clear in our minds, we would like some one to write on this subject through the columns of the C. F. C., and we would like to have some light on this scripture, from those that may be able to understand.

MARY RIGGLE.

Why Is It?

In No. 34, I see an article from sister Barbara Snowberger, headed, "Why is it?" a question of vast importance, and which demands an answer from many. I have had many serious thoughts on the matter. At the last lovefeast I attended, there were a great many members; and when seated at the tables I looked around, and I felt solemn. There were there from far and near. I thought of the great general assembly of the saints. There were the sisters, all wearing the same token of reverence; but when I looked on the brethren's side, I saw many, that, from their appearance, I would not have taken to be brethren. If the CAP is the sister's sign, please tell us what the brethren's sign is, so we may know them too.

QUERY: Were David's psalms the only sacred songs used in worship among the Jews? What did they sing before these were written? and what should the people of God sing now, in order that their worship will be most acceptable to the honor and glory of God?

We have a very zealous people here, who believe it to be almost an unpardonable sin to sing for the praise and worship of God anything else than the inspired songs of David. They teach that the psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs are all included in the book of Psalmody, and mean the different psalms; and they tell us, too, that the church of the Brethren did at first sing psalms along the River Uphrates, and now are practicing the great violation of the word of God.

Wake up, my brethren and my sisters; if possible give an answer to every question asked through our papers. They are not asked for naught. Give all the information and scriptural light you can. In this way we can be much edified.

MARY ROHRER.

Honey Grove, Pa.

To Brother D. P. Sayler.

COVINGTON, Ohio,
Sept. 10th, '73.

BROTHER SAYLER: I feel like saying something to you in regard to your reply to sister H. Knouff's letter; but where and how to commence I am at a loss to know. There have been several replies to your letter, through the C. F. C.; so you are aware that the brethren generally think you treated aunt Hannah rather harshly. I have been waiting to see an acknowledgment to that effect, but have not seen or heard of any as yet, on your part. I will just say, that the Brethren here, that have been acquainted with sister Hannah for thirty or forty years, have a very high opinion of her Christian character, and seem to think that you should at least make some apology, if not public acknowledgment, for the rough manner in which you have treated her. As for myself, I have been acquainted with her (as a near neighbor) for nearly twenty years, and I can truly say, that a more sympathetic, charitable, free and kind-hearted sister I never knew; in short, I believe her to be a refined Christian woman; and if you are acquainted with her, as you say you are, I am the more astouished at you replying to her as you did. I believe aunt Hannah wrote in reply to Bro. Eby as she did, out of sympathy and charity to her Iowa sisters, and not for the purpose of rebuking Bro. Eby as you accuse her; and I want you to expressly understand that I am not rebuking you, but merely admonishing you to be more careful how you reply to a kind-hearted Christian sister. I would just say in conclusion, that I never saw aunt Hannah without a very plain cap on her head.

She is no relative of mine—I call her aunt out of respect to her age and Christian character.

Now, brother Sayler, I hope you will take no offence at my writing and asking you to let us know how you feel about it by this time, either thro' the COMPANION or to me by private letter. Yours in Christian love.

ENOCH BEERY.

Moustache.

In COMPANION No. 33, present vol., page 519, there is an article headed, Moustaches, in which the writer says, "The right to wear it has very properly been questioned. No one has any moral right to be indecent." And then he makes use of a passage of Scripture, namely, "Let all things be done decently and in order," 1 Cor. 14: 40, and says, "Nothing can be more indecent, so far as the human face is concerned, than to conceal its beauty beneath a filthy mange of hair. But the upper lip, shingled with a cupola of moustache is the most disgusting. No phenomenon could be more befitting savages," &c. Now I have no idea that the writer is a brother, or that he ever read his Bible with much care, else would not have made use of the reproachful language concerning the full beard, with which God made man, when he made him in his own likeness. And when God chose a certain people, he commanded them not to cut off their beard, not so much as to mar the corners thereof. See Lev. 19: 27, and 21: 5. To the contrary, baldness and clipped beards were always a shame, horror, and scandle in the time of the law and the prophets. See 2 Samuel 10: 4-5, Jer. 48: 37, 38. And if historians can be credited, such as Josephus, and many others, Jesus Christ of Nazareth also wore a full beard, and even on the upper lip, nicely decorating the Son of God, decently and in order, for "God is a God of order." But in this, God, according to the writer, T. F. Tukesbury, would look upon him as upon the most degraded of human monsters, that no decent person could have the offer to drink after without feeling insulted. He farther says, "We have no right to annoy others by such indecency," &c., and then he concludes with the language of the apostle, "Lay apart all filthiness and superfluity." James 1: 21. We all know that to be filthy does not become the Christian; but that the full beard makes him filthy I could never see; and if there is any superfluity or indecency in it, and it is wrong to wear it, then it should not find a place in the church or the Bible. Then, and not till then, can the writer justly claim that "the right to wear it has very properly been questioned." What I have written, I have written in respect of God and his word, and God's people.

JOHN FORNEY, Sen.

Falls City, Neb.

Encouraging.

Brother Henry:

The COMPANION for the present year exceeds the past for richness of matter and variety of topics. Old veteran correspondents stand unquailingly at their posts, and new ones are enlisting. The reproofs are sometimes rather sharp, and the contention in the ranks rather strong. Occasionally enthusiastic correspondents get a little out of the way, but the more devout in Israel soon instruct them more perfectly in the ways of the Lord. Permit me at this point to express my approbation of the happy and successful manner that brother J. S. Flory has met the writer on "Charity." Let us be careful, brethren, that we do not get our mantle of charity so large as to cover a multitude of sins, in a bad sense. "Charity rejoiceth in the truth."

J. P. Miller's "Parental Influence" is interesting, but it comes so much scattered. Why is it? The investigation of the subject will doubtless result in good among the thoughtful, who have at heart the well-being of their children and society at large. The person who can tell parents what their duties are toward their children, and arouse them up to a vigorous discharge of them, is doing his race a favor that will not lose its reward. Think of the human guilt and misery that is moaning over every peopled continent and dying away on the shore of eternity, and the generation that is growing up amidst it all! Our influence is carving upon something more imperishable than marble.

The discussion about the proper covering for sisters may just as well come to an end. The most important point is admitted—that a covering is required—but what is it to consist of, may be discussed for centuries and end where it began. So long as the sisters do not submit to a cap from a sense of duty to the church, compulsion will be a poor remedy. But every sister of high aims, I think, must have a spice of this principle within her—to submit to the reasonable demands of the church of their choice from a sense of duty. It may not be so quick an incentive as glory, but it is a nobler one, and gives a tone to character which glory cannot impart. Therefore let us all honor the church now in the wilderness journey, that we may enjoy a membership in it, in its glorified, exalted, and triumphant state. Dr. Clark says: "Those who are impatient of rule are, generally, those who wish to tyrannize. And those who are loudest in their complaints against authority, whether civil or ecclesiastical, are those who wish to have the power in their own hands, and would infallibly abuse it if they had. They alone who are willing to obey, are capable of rule; and he who can rule well, is as willing to obey as to govern."

The news from the churches is encouraging. This is one reason why I love the C. F. C. It comes on its weekly visit like a missive from an old familiar friend. How often, when downcast, it has refreshed us as a "leaf from the tree of life." Through it we know what is going on from the A. M. to the remotest bounds of the brotherhood. The satisfaction of knowing what is going on is worth more than money.

Go on in your mission. Speak the truth in love. Be gentle, be tender, persuasive and kind. We will try to practice the virtues you teach, and bear with your imperfections.

JAMES A. SELL.

Newry, Pa.

Sons of God and Daughters of Men.

In current volume, number 36, page 572, there is a query asked by G. W. Jones. It is important to understand this passage of scripture, found in Gen. 6: 1, 2: "And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose." My mind leads me to think that the Sethites and the Cainites stood related to one another as the church of God and the world: or as the woman and the serpent: the sons of Seth these were called the sons of God, while the sons of Cain were styled the sons of men, or of the serpent. So the Sethites began to look upon the Cainites, or daughters of the Cainites, as being fair or handsome, and they intermarried with them. So long as the sons of God (or Seth) maintained their integrity, and walked in the way of the tree of life, the two communities had no religious association, or family intercourse. The time however arrived when the middle wall of the partition was about to be laid low by a general apostacy. A spirit of liberalism had arisen among the sons and daughters of Seth, the result of an expiring faith, which predisposed them to a fraternity, or mixed communion, with the Cainites; who, like their father, were religionists of a wilful stamp. The sons and daughters of men, or of the serpent's seed, enjoyed themselves in those days as they do now. They were men of the flesh, grovelling in their [illegible] and parents, and devoted to the [illegible] flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. Their religion was God what pleased them best; and doubtless afforded a fair specimen of the [illegible] of thing in all subsequent ages. It is quite probable, that the principle and example of the sons of God, (or the Sethites,) had considerable modified the original impiety of the Cainites, as to bring them to a similar state as that observable in our day. Sects, between whom there were no more dealings in their beginning, than between the Jews and the Samaritans, are now so liberal, that they agree to be silent upon all controversial topics for which they once contended to their death, and to recognize one another as brethren in the Lord. But Paul said, "If they marry let them marry only in the Lord." See Deut. 7: 1—3, &c.; Jude 11th verse, 1 Cor. 8: 39. The sons of God corrupted themselves in marrying the daughters of Cain. "They were beguiled into the way of Cain." For the sons of God to marry daughters of the serpent, or the Cainites, is to jeopardize their fidelity to God. Yours in love.

DR. E. L. MACKAY.

Beaver Creek, Md.

Missionary.

Editors and readers of the Companion:

Beloved in the Lord, you are aware that I have been advocating missionary labors by the brethren, and with it missionary support by the church, as a gospel order. I have not changed my mind, but I have been reminded in several instances, lately, that it had an effect entirely foreign from my object. With a heavy heart I write to correct the abuse, if possible. It is said that this and that brother (minister), in response to invitations to attend communion meeting replied, "If you will pay my expenses, I will attend and labor for you: if not I will stay at home." And this is said by brethren who are worth many thousands of dollars in this world's goods—brethren who are laying up treasure in this world to their own hurt and the hurt of their families. Brethren, remember, that riches are very often the snares of the devil. Remember, too, that many of the brethren and sisters cannot see the propriety or necessity of a supported ministry, and that they are mostly of the wealthier class, and hence such expenses must be drawn from the poorer class, if obtained at all. Remember, that is is more blessed to give than to receive: and that you have not yet taken to the advice of Holy Writ, and cease to entangle yourselves with the affairs of this world: that you have not heeded the command of Paul to Timothy, and given yourselves wholly to the work. If you love the brethren and the cause as Jesus loves, you will be amply repaid the outlay for going a hundred miles, or so, to meet, to labor, and commune with the people of God. So long as you indulge in speculation, and money getting at the expense of the prosperity of Christ's cause, so long you must expect to give of your money to mend the breach.

I shall continue to advocate a supported missionary system, but, beloved brethren, do not be too fast. Do not begin at the wrong place. Excuse a little self-denial. Do not press your claims to the detriment of the cause for which Jesus died. Think of his self-denial, his sufferings, his tears, his bruises, his wounds, his death for the redemption of the world. In love.

G. B. REPLOGLE.

Moulton, Iowa.

Warning.

On page 515, of the COMPANION, written by S. M. Minnich, headed "Utility," are some strictures and criticisms on the last A. M., which made me feel sorry to see from the pen of a brother. Who can find so much fault with that council? I will not repeat much of what is said in the article; but notice some of its criticisms. I was present at that meeting, and felt as if the Spirit of the Lord was present, and the business was done in the fear of the Lord. It is said that the church complains of the Annual Meeting, but does not try to remedy it. I fear the writer has partaken of some of the Methodism he speaks of at the commencement of his article; as Methodism complains of all our Brethren do, and speaks against the truth. Now it is the churches that send the very questions complained of to the Annual Council, and the council does not form them. If the churches should govern, and are more perfect than the council, why do they send such trifling matters up to the Council, that are of no utility or use to the church? This is not wisdom in them to do so. In the Apostolic age or days, the churches were governed by the council of Apostles and Elders. See Acts 15: 20, 23; and 2 Thess. 1: 1. The brethren always tried to give the best counsel and advice they possibly could, and we do well if we only take heed to it; for we can already see a spirit at work to disobey the counsel of our Elders. And how is it in so many churches? Committee after committee is called. We should all feel and do as Aaron and Hur did to Moses, who held up his feeble hands while the battle was going on: we should not discourage our Elders, but encourage them by our love and respect for them, as the Apostle says they are worthy of double honor. I am often pained to see so much written and printed about the caps, &c., and "have we thus saith the Lord for this thing and that which the church practices?" We all promised in our vow to hear the church and the Gospel; and yet some are rebellious and not willing to hear the instructions given us, and try to make by-paths to walk in, for which they will have to answer in the Judgment of the Lord.

JOHN WEYBRIGHT.

Double Pipe Creek, Md.

News from the Churches.

Sister Sallie E. Cart, of Morrisonville, Ill., says:

"We had a communion meeting on the 6th and 7th inst. We held an election. Brother Owen Peters was chosen to the ministry. Morrisonville, Christian Co., Ill., is his address.

Change of Address.

John Hershey, from Cornelia, Mo. to Warrensburg, Mo.

(Visitor please copy.)

J. HERSHEY.

Announcements.

The Lord willing, our lovefeast will be on the 10th of October, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M., in our meetinghouse, three miles north-east of Monticello, White Co., Ind.

There will be a lovefeast in the Dry Creek congregation, Linn county, Iowa, Nov. 1st and 2nd.

The brethren in California will hold a communion meeting in a grove on the south side of the Merced River, Merced county, Cal., 6 miles west of Cussics station, Southern Pacific Railroad. By order of the church.

ELD. GEO. WOLFE.

A lovefeast in the Rock River congregation, Lee county, Ills., on the 8th and 9th of October.

The members of the Salamony arm of the church, have appointed a communion meeting, on the 28th of October, commencing at ten o'clock. Those coming by Railway, will stop at Huntington. We expect to have conveyance at Huntington the day before the meeting, to convey members to the place of meeting.

SAMUEL MURRAY.

We intend, the Lord willing, to hold our lovefeast on the 10th and 11th of October, in the Four Mile congregation, Union county, Ind. The place of meeting is ten miles south-east of Richmond, Wayne county, Ind. There will be conveyance at Richmond the day before the meeting.

Fraternally,

JACOB RIFE.

Our lovefeast will be in the Panther Creek congregation, Iowa, on the 4th and 5th of October, to commence at one o'clock.

ROBERT BADGER.

We intend to hold our communion in the Duncansville branch, Blair county, Pa., on the 7th and 8th of October. Meeting to commence at 4 o'clock.

J. A. SELL.

The brethren in the Buffalo Valley, Union county, Pa., intend, if the Lord willing, to have a lovefeast on the 30th of October, to commence at one o'clock p. m., and meetings to continue for several days. Brethren coming to us, will please make their arrangements to stay, at least, over Sunday. By order of the church.

ISAAC MYERS.

Lovefeast at Fairview, two and a half miles south of Unionville, in Appanoose county, Iowa, Oct. 31, commencing at 2 o'clock p. m.

JACOB BAIR.

LOVE-FEASTS.

Near Greenfield, Howard county, Kan. Oct. 18, and 19.

Brush Creek, Osceola, St. Clair county, Mo., Sept. 28.

Cold Water, Green, Butler county, Iowa, Oct. 8, and 9th.

4 miles south of Shanesville, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, Oct. 4.

Hamilton, Caldwell county, Mo., at the residence of Paul Sult, Oct. 4, and 5.

Dry Valley, Mifflin county, Pa, Oct. 3d, in the evening.

Spring Run, Mifflin county, Pa., Oct 5th, in the evening.

Wacondah, 5 miles north of Harden, Ray county, Mo., Oct. 4, and 5.

Santa Fe, Miami county, Ind., Oct. 3.

Middlecreek, Somerset Co., Pa., Oct. 2.

Four miles south of Waterloo, Iowa, Oct. 11, 12.

Grove M. H., Fayette Co., Pa. Oct. 4.

Montgomery, Indiana Co., Pa. Oct. 3.

Root River, Fillmore Co., Minn. Oct. 4, 5.

Coal Creek, Fulton Co., Ill. Oct. 8.

Salem, Marion Co., Ill. Oct. 11.

Aughwick, Huntington Co., Pa. Oct. 7.

Marshall Co., Iowa. Oct. 4, 5.

Four miles east of Leon, Decatur Co., Iowa. Oct. 2.

Dunnen's Creek, Bedford Co., Pa., Oct. 3.

Washington Creek, Douglas Co, Kansas, Oct. 4, 5.

Bachelor Run, Carroll Co., Ind., Oct. 25.

Thorn Apple, Mich., Oct. 5.

Bushnell, McDonough county Ill., Oct. 5, 6.

Osawkee, Kansas, Oct. 4, 5.

Fawn River, Lima, Lagrange county, Ind. October 4.

Nettle Creek, Hagerstown, Ind. Oct. 3.

Sam's Creek, Md., October, 11,

Monocacy, Md., October, 17.

Meadow Branch, Md., Oct. 21.

Beaver Dam, Md., Oct. 25.

Indian Creek, Fayette county, Pa., Oct. 4.

MARRIED.

By the undersigned, on the evening of the 14th, of September, Mr. SAMUEL J. GIFFIN and Miss JULIA ANN STINEMAN, all of Conemaugh, Cambria, Co., Pa.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

WILLIAM SNYDER was instantly killed by the cars, one mile west of Gallitzin, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, in Cambria county, Pa., July 17th, aged 39 years 6 months and 23 days. He fell or jumped off the way passenger train going west. A freight train east was near at the time, and could not be stopped until two wheels of the engine passed over his head. His remains were brought back to Gallitzin, and buried in the Methodist burying-ground. He was a son of Harman Snyder, dec'd.

THOMAS S. HOLSINGER.

Died in the South Santaam congregation, Linn Co., Oregon, June 13, 1873, our much beloved sister ELLEN RUSSEL, wife of brother William Russel, aged 44 years 9 months and 12 days. She leaves a sorrowing husband and two children to mourn their loss, which we hope is her great gain. Brother William has lost an affectionate companion, her children a kind mother, but we do hope they will prepare to meet her in that bright world above. Her disease was consumption, which she bore with Christian fortitude, and oftimes she spoke of her home above. Funeral services by brother David Brower, from John 5: 25, 28, and 29th verses, to a large and attentive concourse of people.

AARON H. BALTIMORE.

In the Rock River congregation, Lee Co., Ill., ADAM HOSTETLER, August 31st, aged 68 years 10 months and 22 days. Died with dropsy.

Rock River congregation, Lee county, Ill., Sept. 2d, LEVI HOSTETLER, son of the above, aged 34 years 7 months less 1 day. Disease, typhoid fever. He left a sorrowing widow and four children, to mourn their loss.

ANDREW M. DEEDORFF.

In the Monticella branch Ind., JOHN SHOFF, son of Christian and Mary Shoff, Sept. 7th, aged 21 years 11 months and 25 days. Disease, consumption, of which he had to suffer for about two years. Funeral occasion improved from John 5: 25—28. This is another warning to the young, not to delay, but to remember their Creator in the days of their youth, so when sickness or death comes, they can say with one of old, "I am now ready to depart."

In the same congregation, killed by lightning, on the 4th of July, our beloved brother GEORGE ANTRIM, aged about 31 years, leaving a wife (a dear sister) and three children to mourn the loss of a dear husband and father; but we feel assured that they need not mourn as those that have no hope, and that their loss is his eternal gain. Funeral occasion improved, from Matth. 24: 44.

JOHN S. SNOWBERGER.

August 13th, friend ELIZABETH, wife of friend Samuel STEWART, and daughter of brother Jonathan and sister Margaret Barkey, age 25 years and 6 months. She left a babe 9 days old, one little boy, and a sorrowing husband to mourn their loss. She was a member of the Brethren in Christ.

MARK MINSER.

Near Tiffin, Ohio, Sept. 4th, of cholera infantum, LAURA RICHARD, daughter of brother James and sister Sarah, aged 11 months and thirteen days. Funeral discourse by the brethren, from the words, "Forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

S. A. WALKER.

Elmer Bowser, son of David and Lydia Bowser, was born July 11th 1871, died September 12th 1873, aged 2 years 2 month and 1 day. Was buried at the Beech Grove Meeting-house, Sept. 14th: Funeral discourse from Matth. 19: 14, 15.

E. L. YODER.

JACOB CRISSEY, August 13th, aged 95 years, 5 months and 9 days. He lived and died without being a member of any church Funeral services by the writer, from 2 Cor. 5: 10. THOMAS BLOUGH.

LIST OF MONEYS RECEIVED for SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS, etc.,

A Weimer	1 50	E Coher	1 50
Leonard Wolf	1 50	Sallie E Carl	1 50
Eld Geo Wolf	85	E B Shaver	50
H Muhlenburg	90	A C Numer	10
Eliza Brandt	60	Callie Bowers	37
Daniel Artz	3 75	S M Minnich	1 60

WE will admit a limited number of select advertisements at the following rates
One insertion, 20 cents a line.
Each subsequent insertion 15 cents a line.
Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.
No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations.

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS.

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.

EDW'D J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen,
YORK, PA

THE "SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS,

Manufactured by F. P. Needham & Son. 143. 145 & 147 East 23d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passengers Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:

MT. DALLAS ACCOM., at 7: 50 A. M.

HUNTINGDON EXPRESS, at 2: 55 P. M.

RETURNING.

EXPRESS, leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.

ACCOMMODATION, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. In time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c.

W. H. BROWN, SUPT.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE
By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.

This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works. "NIGHT SCENES," and "OUR FATHER'S HOUSE," nearly 100,000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. ZIEGLER & M'CURDY, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,

J. H. MOORE,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

Farm For Sale.

Guardian sale of 179 acres of choice land. Will be sold at public sale Tuesday, Sept. 23d, 1873. Well located, well watered, good improvements, bank barn, brick house, with all the necessary out-buildings; situated only 5 miles from good market; located in the western part of Milton Township, about midway between Smithville on the south and Pike Station on the A. & G. W. R. R., in Wayne county, Ohio, known as the Pinkerton farm. DAVID LITTLE.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2 50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARICE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-tf.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary Word-for-word English Translation. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. WILLIAM AIKMAN, D. D. $1.50.

Man, in Genesis and in Geology; or, the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. WELLS. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporaneous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Aims and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By GEORGE COMBE. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs. Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structure and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by true immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid,	1.25
Per dozen " "	13.30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 00 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC. Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music; adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1.25 per copy, postpaid, or $10.00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO FICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$2.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	2.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25
32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION.	25
BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.	$1.70
Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Moomaw, prepaid,	.75
Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid,	.75
12 copies, by Express,	7.00
Pious Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid,	.45
Browns Pocket Concordance,	.60
German & English Testaments,	.75
NEAD'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid,	1.45
" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid	1.40
COMPANION Volume 3, bound post paid,	$2.7
Reserved at the office,	2.25

HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $ 1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco, To ministers on Tobacco, Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63. Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interest."

228 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,

431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

Will fill orders for Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or PANACEA West of Ohio.

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.

Waynesboro, Franklin Co. Pa.

Will control the Eastern and Southern States. All letters should be carefully directed as above, and letters containing money must be registered.

This year was more favorable for curing herbs than any other for ten years, the medicine is therefore warrented perfect.

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments."—Jesus. At $1 50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, OCT. 7, 1873. NUMBER 40.

A Mother's Counsel.

Mary Clarke, wife of the learned Adam Clarke, was the mother of six sons and six daughters; and the love she bore to them would astonish many in these days. To one of her sons she wrote the following instructive words: "Do nothing carelessly, and then, I venture to say, that with the ability you have, you will do most things well. Be exact in all you do, nor let the least matter pass you unexamined. In your reading, too, investigate your subject, and be not satisfied with skimming on the surface of things, nor make an attempt to grasp the whole, without attending to every part in order. Paying attention to particulars, as well as to generalities, will by degrees give you a habit of mental observation, while at the same time it will deepen your knowledge. But endeavor to gain heavenly wisdom. Do not forget to bare your needs and your heart in private before God, that He may grant you his grace, and direct all your paths in life."

Compiled for the COMPANION.

Family Prayer.

Dear brethren and sisters, there is no plainer duty of Christian profession than that of family prayer. Nothing can be a substitute for it; no degree of faithfulness or regularity in other duties will atone for the neglect of this. It is not a small consideration to have all the members of a family brought together, morning and evening. Love must be the cause in any household, to have the members all meet together. This precious service unites a family in a more sacred and sweet union of love on earth. It calls them to the same Savior; it kindles in them a desire to meet their Savior in heaven. It is strange that this duty of family prayer is so often made to depend on the husband and father. In many families, no other member is willing to discharge the service. If the husband is absent for a day, or longer, no thank-offering is rendered at the table, and there is no prayer in the family. The service is wholly neglected; the wife seems to think that family prayer is of no consequence when her husband is absent. And some widows never observe this service; they never honor God and his word by assembling their children for family worship. As their husbands are dead, they deem that a sufficient reason why family worship should be discontinued. Is such a service any the less needed because the husband and father is absent, or has been called away by death? How can wives and mothers have an easy conscience in the neglect of a duty so plain? And we may well add that such a service should be mutual in a family. When a husband and wife are living, there is certainly no reason why the voice of the husband should be heard invariably, and the wife's never heard. And still there are families in which this is the case. It is not best that the same one should lead off all the time. The wife should be willing to lead in her turn. She will gain by it herself, and it is best for her husband, and best for her children. It gives interest to the service, to thus vary it. The children need the influence of hearing their mother's voice at prayer, as well as their father's. How precious and powerful the influence of such a remembrance for future years.

There is another fact which needs to be seriously thought of in this connection. There is many a wife in our churches, whose husband is not a professor of religion. Is there no need of family prayer in that household? And on whom does it devolve, if not on the wife? There are very few husbands who would oppose their wives in such a service. Wife, have you ever, in the morning or evening, said, now, husband, you and the children sit down for a short time, while I read a few verses from the word of God, and pray to God? Wife have you ever done this? If not, can you feel that you have done your duty? Your husband, and the world around, expect to see a difference between a professor and a non-professor, and God requires it.

SUSAN REBER.

Waterloo, Iowa.

For the Companion.

Tobacco.

On page 253 of C. F. C. brother Wm. Culp asks a number of questions concerning tobacco, which I will try to answer, and without much of a preface at once take up his questions.

In the first question, brother, you wish to know who created that plant—whether it was the devil or our heavenly Father? Now this is a question which is not very easy to decide; since we read in a parable that a man sowed good seed in his field, but while men slept an enemy sowed tares into the wheat: and when his friends saw the tares, they said in surprise: "Sir, didst thou not sow good seed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares?" He said unto them, "An enemy hath done this." Now, if the enemy could sow tares, he is not any too good to have sown tobacco. So much, so far, in favor of the devil, as you call him. Now we will consider whether it is a plant of our heavenly Father's planting. We read, when Adam had sinned, the Lord said to him, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake. Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee." Now I think it must be clear to every comprehensive mind, that there were no poisonous weeds, no deadly nightshades, no narcotic plants on the earth before the fall of Adam. Neither could there have been upas trees, nor Sodom apples, nor poisonous berries, so long as Adam had not sinned. For, "out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food." What the Lord created in the time of creation was all good. That is so as you say, brother. But what grew out of the ground afterwards in consequence of the curse, or as the fruit of it, was not good. So that after due consideration we may venture to say, we doubt whether tobacco is a plant of our Heavenly Father's planting. But suppose the Lord did create tobacco, then He also created the poppies from which opium is made, and opium in its proper place as a medicine is certainly very good. But the way thousands of men and women use it is not good. The same applies to tobacco as medicine in its proper place. But why should the Lord create the poppies and tobacco for medicine before he created Adam? Or even afterward so long as he needed no physician? All the scripture for or against tobacco using, or abusing, may be summed up in these few words, "He that is filthy let him be filthy still." The two last and most important questions, are as follows; first, "Which is doing the greater evil, using tobacco or following the foolish fashions of the world in dress?" Upon my word, brother, I consider this a shallow question. You admit that using tobacco is doing evil, and also that following the fashions of the world in dress is doing evil. But which is doing the greater evil, I should suppose depends mostly upon the taste and fancy of its votaries. You admit that both are evils; and so I say, let that be enough: cease to do evil. Second, you say, "Now dear brethren, can any of you prove by the Bible, that a man will be debarred from heaven for using tobacco?" You have admitted that using tobacco is an evil. Now if you think that a man with an evil habit will be admitted into heaven, you may still venture to use it. It is true, we do not read of tobacco in the Bible, but we read about good and evil. The Savior says, "he that denyeth not himself, and taketh up his cross daily and followeth me, cannot be my disciple." This is plain enough. Did Jesus chew or smoke tobacco? Did he eat opium? I think not.

J. Y. Heckler.

Harleysville, Pa.

Pride.

What is the difference? First, what is pride.? Pride is a principle that blinds the mind to such an extent that causes humanity to form a better opinion of one's self than others may think of us. When the mind becomes intoxicated by inhaling the spirit of pride, we dream that we are some great personage. seated upon the throne of fame, with the world around us, ready to do us homage. But all the prood do not claim this much; they lack the means and opportunities. Extreme pride runs heavenward, it aspires to ripen there, but when it is plucked it will be "thrust down to hell." Pride in its various branches, or different degrees, does not work to each one the same end. Like the dollar, for one it may buy a Testament, for another a bottle of rum. We are all in possession of pride; we all have an idol dear to our hearts, and are influenced by pride to honor that idol more or less, whatever it may be. If I have a principle that does not injure my neighbor; that does not throw its influence for evil around my associates; that does not teach my neighbor's children to make a false show in the world; that does not keep the poor children from Sunday-school; that does not tell my acquaintances that I am a stylish man, and I like best fashionable company, that is not eager to be in the latest fashions; that does not hiss at the old father and mother in Israel; that does not frown at my brother because his hair betokens the image of Christ; that does not dislike a sister who wears a token of entire submission, whether to God or man; I say, if I am characterized by such a principle, let every mouth be stopped, and every tongue be silent. It is not the letter that kills, but the spirit. It is the influence thrown upon the world that makes pride a canker which eats and devours, whether it be in the home circle, or upon the battle field. Within themselves there is no evil in ribbons, ruffles, and fine vehicles, but the evil is in the principle or heart that prompts to action in laying hold of these things to accomplish certain ends. When I see a real proud brother or sister, I can't say they are proud of their religion. This is the opinion of the world.

SAM. C. BASHOR.

Whiteville, Mo.

To be continued.

A Crumb of Comfort for Young Wives.

"Many a discouraged mother folds her tired hands at night, and feels as if she had, after all, done nothing, although she has not spent an idle moment since she rose. Is it nothing that your little helpless children have had some one to come to with all their childish griefs and joys? Is it nothing that your husband feels safe, when he is away to his business—your careful hand directs everything at home? Is it nothing when his business is over, that he has the blessed refuge home which you have that day done your best to brighten and refine? O weary and faithful mothers, you little know your power when you say, I have done nothing. There is a book in which a fairer record than this is written against your name."

"By angels 'mong the angels ranked,
Of all most tender-hearted:
For woman was a temple reared,
In ages long departed,
Of whitest marble in the fane
With richest jewels glowing;
Of sinless seraphs in the choir,
With tenderest music flowing.

MINNIE ROELKY.

Selected by CATHARINE FANSLER.

The Altar at Home.

Oh! well I remember a long time ago,
While a stranger now lonely I roam,
The scenes of my childhood, the friends of my youth
And the hallowed altar at home.

Where a mother's devotion at evening with ours,
Went up thro' the star-lighted dome,
And we knelt with a father to worship in prayer
Round the hallowed altar at home.

At morn our hymn with the songs of the birds
Trilled out on the soft, balmy air,
And we knelt ere we went to the toils of the day
Round that hallowed altar of prayer.

But the home of my childhood is desolate now,
We were gathered away one by one,
The light faded out from those beautiful scenes,
And the altar is broken and gone.

Yet faith to my rapturous vision unfolds
A home in a city afar,
When I kneel on my journey to worship alone
At my altar now everywhere.

And I know they are there at that happier home,
And that free from all sorrow and pain,
I soon shall be called from my altar below,
To join them in worship again.

Then let the glad years of eternity roll,
No anguish nor penitent prayer,
Or a desolate one with the cross all alone
Will be heard at the altar up there.

Hudson, Ill.

At Home.

The highest stage of being at home, grows out of a special state of affections, rather than of the intellect. We have met with individuals who would be a passport to any society, and whose manners the unstudied and spontaneous expressions of their innerselves, make them visibly welcome wherever they go. And attract unbounded confidence towards them in whatever they undertake. They are frank, because they have nothing to conceal; affable, because their natures overflow with benevolence; uninfluenced, because they dread nothing; alway at home, because they carry within themselves that which can trust to itself anywhere and everywhere—Purity of soul, with fulness of health, such are our best guarantees for feeling at home in all society to which duty takes us, and in every occupation upon which it obliges us to enter. They who live least for themselves are also least embarrassed by uncertainties.

The Difference.

CHILD.

What have they done? those Mexicans,
I should much like to know;
I think I never heard before
Of killing people so.

FATHER.

Done! they 're a weak and paltry race,
And all the papers say,
They owe our nation certain sums
Which they will never pay.

CHILD.

Well, Sammy Jenks is owing me
A sixpence for a knife;
I'll go some night and burn him out,
And take the fellow's life.

FATHER.

What! take his life, you naughty child,
Restrain your wicked tongue;
You would be tried for murder, boy,
And on the gallows hung!

CHILD.

Then why not hang the volunteers!
Is it more wicked then,
To shoot and kill a single boy
Than kill a thousand men?

FATHER.

Boy, boy, you 're talking rather wild,
You 'd better go up stairs,
And go to to bed it 's getting late,
And don't forget your prayers.

For the COMPANION.

Baptism, the Door into the Church.

In two different articles I have tried to show, that, according to the teachings of the Savior and the apostles, baptism is the door into the church. If this should be denied, let us go to the law and the testimony. The Savior says, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they that testify of me." Peter, in speaking of Jesus, says, "For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." Acts 3: 22, 23. This text will give us a starting point. We are told that we shall hear him in all things. What all things? All that Jesus said unto us.

In Matthew 28: 19, 20, we have the commission: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations." Teach what? Moses says, "All things whatsoever he shall say unto you." Jesus tells them, after they have taught them, to baptize them. He also says in another place, (Mark 16: 16), "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." What is it to believe? It is to have faith in his word; that Jesus is the Son of God; that he brought from heaven a saving gospel, and that there is power enough in that word to save us. When we so believe, and are willing to forsake all carnal propensities or habits of this world—willing to give up all for the sake of his word that was sealed with his blood—it is then, we think, we are fit subjects for baptism, and not till then. But some tell us it is not necessary to be baptized; we can have our sins forgiven whether we are baptized or not. This is a scripture that I never have been lucky enough to find; and I don't think it is in God's word.

Now we will come to the teachings of Jesus again; for we shall hear him. What did he tell Nicodemus, who came to Jesus by night, acknowledging him to be the Christ? He said to him, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Here we see it is necessary for us to be baptized in order to get into the church; and we never will or can enter unless we are baptized; for baptism is for the remission of sins. Jesus tells us in Luke's gospel, (24: 47,) "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name, among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." This is what he told the apostles to preach.

Now Peter, to you the blessed Savior gave the keys of the kingdom, what do you say? Why, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38. In 1 Peter 3: 21, he tells us, in speaking of the old world, that Christ "went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which some time were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." The Brethren are often accused of having "water on the brain," as they believe baptism is an essential ordinance. I hope none of us put more stress upon baptism than any other command. But let it be as it may, if preaching, we must have "water on the brain." Peter too had water on the brain," when he preached to the inquiring souls on the day of Pentecost. So had our Savior's forerunner, John, for we find him and Jesus in the waters of Jordan. Jesus must have had water on the brain too, when he told Nicodemus that he must be born of water. So Phillip, to preach Jesus, had to have "water on the brain" too; for we are told he "preached unto him Jesus," Then where do we find him? Down yonder in the water, baptizing the eunuch. Then Paul, in Romans 6: 4, 5, says, "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also shall walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection." Now what was the apostle trying to teach us? Was it that after we have had our sins remitted we should be baptized? Why be baptized when our life is hid with Christ in God? Are you not as good as you can be, when you have no sin upon you? But this is not what he was teaching. We read in the third verse of the same chapter, where he says, "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" Then he continues: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism."

Brethren, how often have we witnessed the return of souls, young and old, who had wandered far away from their Father's house, who had been living far from God, when they would hear the word of God, how miserable they would seem to feel! We truly can sympathize with them. Those who have been made willing to follow Jesus, after they have heard or read God's word, can look back upon their past lives. How many times they had sinned against their God, and how often they had turned a deaf ear to the word of the Lord! Yes, when they could behold their blessed Jesus, with an eye of faith, nailed to the cross to suffer and die for them. When they saw what Jesus had done for them, how willing they were to follow him down to the stream, to be buried with him in baptism. How solemn and beautiful it is to see them go down into the water, kneeling down before their God, promising to forsake all their evil habits, and covenanting with God that they would follow him. I have often thought it could not be that men and women could stand by and witness such a scene as this, and yet live in rebellion against their heavenly Father. Yet we see some that will say, (and professors too), that it is a disgrace to go down there into the water. This calls to mind the Savior's language, Mark the 8:38, "whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my word in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels. Right here we see that the very things that are to make us fit subjects for heaven are rejected, we might say by nearly all professors of christianity. The very things that will make us happy are rejected; our minds are again wandering over the world. How they are divided into schisms and isms! We are told by Paul in Eph. 4:5, that there is "one Lord, one faith, one baptism; one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. What! one baptism? So Paul says. How does this correspond with the christianized world, so called? Why, we hear them say it matters not whether we are baptized or not.

Then, my dear readers, what was the mission of the Savior in the world? If he is the true Messiah, why not follow him? and if we follow him we will go down into the water where he went, there to be "buried with him in baptism." No wonder the Savior would say of certain persons, "these men draw nigh to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me," and "Why call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Luke 6:46. Do we not see that there is a possibility of us being wrong? and just as soon as we leave Jesus we are wrong? Whenever we begin to set up our judgment against God's judgment, then we are out of the way. This is why our Master used that last verse we quoted. And would he not again, if he were here with us in these last days, have cause to weep, and say, Why call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say."

Jesus tells us that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God. Now what is the word of God? The Old and New Testaments. Faith, repentance, baptism, feetwashing, the communion, &c., are all found in the Word of the Lord. And many other things we find there But let it be remembered, that, if we do not come in at the door all of our worship will be in vain. Faith, repentance, and baptism are required of us in order to enter into the church; and it is then we can claim the promise.

May we ever be found faithful, that, when we are to leave the shores of time, we may lay our heads down in peace; and in the last morning we may meet and be owned as the children of our God, is my prayer.

G. M. Noah.

Manner of Preaching.

The manner in which the message of the gospel should be communicated is apparent, if we consider the nature of the message and the persons to whom it is addressed. Here is a company of human beings about to enter an eternity in which there can be no change. This short and uncertain life is their only period of probation. The decree must go forth, "He that is holy, let him be holy still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still.' All are sinners against God, and deserving his condemnation. In infinite love he has provided, through the atonement of his Son, a way of pardon and reconciliation, the benefits of which he offers freely to all who will repent and believe. He has sent this man to make known this good news to this people, and to plead with them to accept of it. If they reject it they sink under the condemnation of the law which they have broken; if they accept it, they rise to glory and everlasting life. Most of this audience are unreconciled to God, liable at every moment to plunge into a lost eternity. Others profess to have embraced the message of salvation; but they are liable to self-deception, and, in a world abounding in temptations, may be seduced into apostasy. Such is the message, and such the condition of the people, whom a minister addresses every time he rises in the pulpit. Was not the question of the apostle appropriate, "Who is sufficient for these things?"

But it is to be observed that this audience is of a very miscellaneous character. They are of every age, from the child in the Sabbath-school to its venerable grandparent. There are assembled men and women of every variety of cultivation. A small portion of the audience may be persons of educated and disciplined minds; the greater part belong to the middle walks of life; some are poor; many are young persons, just entering upon the realities of the world, or, if more advanced, are men of active business, of strong common sense, though destitute of the advantages of literary culture. Great as may be these differences, in one respect they are all on a level. All are tending to the same judgment-seat, and all must hear the announcement, "Come, ye blessed of my Father," or, "Depart ye cursed, into everlasting fire;" and their final condition depends upon the reception which they give to the message of salvation.

Such being the audience, and such the occasion of his address, it is obvious that the first requisite in the manner of the minister's communication is, that he be thoroughly understood by every one of his hearers who is of sufficient capacity to comprehend his message.

1. His words must be such as all his audience, of ordinary capacity, can understand. The message of salvation was first communicated to men, by the Son of God, in such language that the common people heard him gladly. The gospel may be understood by little children, else what is the use of Sabbath-schools? Janeway's "Token for Children" relates many cases of conversion in quite young persons. The daughter of President Edwards gave unequivocal evidences of piety, I think, at the age of four years. In a very interesting revival with which I was acquainted, one of the most interesting converts was an intelligent young person, of eight years of age, who has lately finished her course with joy. We all believe that Sabbath-school teachers should labor for the immediate conversion of their pupils; but this, of course, supposes it possible that they can make themselves understood. It may be said that these teachers are young persons and imperfectly educated, and it cannot be expected that learned men can render their weighty thoughts comprehensible to children and ignorant men and women. Then, I say, if the effect of learning is to keep men from being understood by the common people, the less we have of it the better. The use of learning is to make these truths perfectly plain; and he who renders it the means of making them obscure, deserves to be esteemed a smatterer and a sham. We may be pretty sure that his learning is little, and his common sense.

* * *

Whatever may be said to the contrary, I can hardly conceive that a minister can use the language of the Scriptures in the pulpit too freely, provided he use it appropriately and reverently. Let a man read the sermons of Leighton, and Baxter, or Jay, or Payson, if he would learn how greatly familiarity with the language of the Scriptures adds to the power of him who addresses his fellow-men on the subject of their salvation.

I remember, nevertheless, that John Foster, a very high authority, attributes the aversion of men of taste to revealed religion, in part, at least, to the irreverent, and frequently ludicrous manner, in which the Scriptures are quoted in the pulpit. There may be, no doubt, a foundation for the censure of the great essayist; though it must be a very slight one, for the preachers whom he condemns, and the persons whom he supposes to be injured by them, do not often come in contact. Be this, however, as it may, the effect of the essay has been, I think, upon the whole, decidedly mischievous. It has led many preachers to suppose that it was out of taste, or indicative of a want of education, or, in fact, decidedly rustic, to quote frequently from the Scriptures. It has led to the belief that the language of the pulpit must have nothing to distinguish it from that of any secular composition, and that a popular article in a review may well serve as a model for the style of a sermon. Hence the style of the pulpit is becoming secular; and frequently, after the reading of the text, you will not hear a scriptural expression until the final amen, which has not yet been dispensed with. The same paper has not very unfrequently been put to triple duty. It first appears as a sermon, then as a platform address, or as a lecture before some literary society, and then as an article for some popular magazine, to which it may easily be adapted by cutting off the text and omitting a few sentences of the closing paragraph.—Dr. Wayland

What Can be done for the Children.

With what deep anxiety and solicitude is this question asked by many a parent. How few feel it enough to let their lives show that they are in earnest to seek the cause of the present state of things, and as if life depended upon their individual efforts, commence a reformation.

I have just come from meeting. One brother spoke very lengthily, and said nothing but the truth, but not a bit of feeling in the whole, dry as Sahara, without the redeeming feature of one oasis. During the time, the children fell asleep. Another brother rose, and in the same strain repeated much the same thing. Still the little ones slept, and I thought it was well, for though he told how he felt to see the young going to ruin, he related such a doleful experience that any child would shrink from a road where they would be in danger of meeting the like, and I should advise them them to do so.

Parents, what would you do if the children in your neighborhood came to spend the afternoon with yours? Would you seat them in straight-backed chairs and bring from some dark corner the hideous looking skeletons your father had in his office, and tell them to look at these and remember they too must soon pass away, hoping thus to make a salutary and lasting religious impression upon their young minds? Would you take from your box of relics the dried rose buds and geranium leaves, sacred to you from association, and try to interest them in these because beautiful to you? Would you not rather lead them to the garden, where the summer flowers were blooming in all their freshness, and, while weaving bright garlands, tell them of God, the author of the beautiful? Do you say, "We are too old for this—the young can talk hope, but we who have felt the storm of adversity and suffering have had our hearts chilled as yours will sometime be."

It is true the floodtide of sorrow has swept the shore of many a heart—one by one its idols may have been carried far out into the briny deep, but where is the brave soul that with Christian fortitude says no other life shall be shadowed by a cloud which hangs over mine?

Have you seen the beautiful peaches mellowing in the long August days? Storms as well as sunshine have done their part toward coloring the velvety surface. As the summer days of life go by, and its autumn days come, should they not find us with a deeper experience—a richer soul beauty? Why not have a religion that lasts forever? a kind that makes life sunnier and brighter? The Bible tells us that "the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day," and who would not prefer this to the one where is only darkness and groaning?

The exhortations which reached my heart when a child were not the longest ones however filled with fine rhetorical phrases, but perhaps some aged pilgrim would tell, in words brief and broken, his desires or determinations, or a little child would rise to say, "I love Jesus." These suited me best then, and they do now. But how shall it be done? Live for God at home. Faithfully perform life's little duties—if there are any such—and let your daily life be such that the young will not look incredulous when in meeting you profess to know what religion is. Draw the young heart near to yours in confidence and real concern, and being a child yourself, learning daily at the feet of Jesus, yours will be a language they can understand. I think now of sweet childish faces and lips that loved to talk of Jesus—ears that would listen eagerly when told of heaven and its beauties. Some are now far down the broad road, others are asleep, but alas! not in Jesus.

Who shall be called to give an account for these things? Can we not make our Bible-classes and our social meetings more interesting? Jesus' love is as warm and fresh to-day as when he shared his joys and sorrows of childhood, and so will ours ever remain if we have the right kind. If I plead earnestly, it is because I have been a child, and my heart aches for the children.—ORIGINAL.—in Advent Review.

Moral Strength.

Perhaps there is no virtue which to-day is at so great a discount as moral strength. But who can say but what it is that very virtue, which, among the young of our age, should be at the highest premium. Without it, what can they do? With it, though much else fall short, what is impossible? And yet this very strength is appreciated and almost revered by all lookers on. Only know for yourself, that another possesses it, and how much more highly he is esteemed. Why is it, then, that it is possessed by so few, if so highly esteemed by so many? Why does not every person for himself try to increase it, and perfect himself in it? When once there is a strong determination to do right, when once we feel and know, and put that feeling and knowledge into one determined effort to be firm and true to our own better nature, trusting and relying on Him for strength from above, how much more easy to say no to every sinful thought, and every wrong doing; and how much better satisfied with our actions, and with ourselves we shall be.

God has not placed us here for naught. We each have a work, and a purpose, and exert an influence, and we are accountable to Him for the manner in which we do that work, and the extent and kind of influence which we exert. Some, we are well aware, do not by nature possess the strong will and firm principles which others do. With them we must be gentle, yet firm, bold and true, trying to show that when leaning on Christ's arm, at the same time doing all that we can, then all are safe. He will not let any fall. Some have the erroneous idea that when we lay our burdens on the Lord, we can lay all the work He has given us to do, there also; and that He will do the whole for us. The Bible way is, we think, that we are not to be slothful, that we must work while the day lasts, doing all cheerfully, asking for all needful help from the Source which never fails, and then, when the night comes, laying all our burdens, and all of the results, on Him who doeth all things well, sweetly rest in hope. He will never do our work, but will always help and direct.—Selected.

To the Young.

Dear young readers of the COMPANION; for the first time I try to converse with you through the medium of the press. I am young in years and also in the good cause of our Lord and Master; but we have talents to improve, and if we do not improve them, the fault will be ours. All of us who have arrived at years to know good from evil have a work to do, a spiritual work for the benefit of our souls. It is therefore necessary that we attend to that work in our youthful days, before the evil days come.

I will ask you friendly sinner, Why are you not a Christian? You have some reason. Something that holds you back. What is it? Will you answer "I am too young?" Thank God that you are young. "Those that seek me early shall find me," says Jesus. Remember if you are old enough to sin, then you are old enough to repent of sin. The sooner you seek God the better. "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth, before the evil days come."

Perhaps you will say, "I have no time to devote to religion in my youthful days." I ask you then, for what purpose has time been granted to you at all? To be devoted to carnal pleasure, or to gather riches that you may be tempted to say: "Thou hast much goods laid up for many years?" Alas! God may say: "thou fool this night shall thy soul be required of thee." Do you wait for a more convenient season? So did Felix, when he said to Paul, "Go thy way for this time, when I have a convenient season I will call for thee." But that time never came for him, as far as I know and so it may never come to you.

Oh dear friend, do not put off repentance a single day longer, for really you are much worse now than you think. If God should at once reveal to you the depth of your iniquity, the sight would terrify you. O that you would judge yourself, that you be not condemned with the world. If you knew your own heart, you would cry aloud with the publican: "God be merciful to me a sinner."

ISRAEL BAER.

Somerset, Pa.

Church Gambling.

The Protestant Episcopal church of New York held a meeting lately to discuss the subject of church fairs, in the sinfulness of lottery gambling in connection therewith. One of the reverend gentlemen unqualifiedly condemned the raising of money for religious purposes by games of chance; but a majority of his clerical brethren differed from him, and argued that these little devices of the adversary were the only means by which the worldly-minded could be made to bear a portion of the burdens of supporting the gospel. No wonder that people become disgusted with the present day religious professions when gospel ministers have so far departed from faith in God as to resort to such means in order to have the gospel supported. God have mercy on such preachers. Only a few weeks ago the Governor of Wisconsin was called upon to suppress, by the strong arm of the law, church gambling. Referring to this, Rev. B. F. Booth says: "I hide my face in shame when I hear of a governor of a State being compelled to call upon the law-making department of his State to pass laws to counteract the swindling carried on, under the auspices of the church, under the names of church-fairs, festivals, and other forms of "pious" church gambling. "All this is done in the name of Christ and for his glory;" they say, "The end justifies the means." What blasphemy, what an insult to the name of Christ! Shame upon all such schemes, designed to cheat the devil out of a few cents, but which give him a good bargain in the end. If we must have money for church purposes, let it be given fairly, honestly, without having to pass through the devil's machinery, giving to it the odor of perdition. The world demands of the church fair dealing; and it should have it, also. And if the church wants influence over the world, let it put away its shameful practices of corruption of every kind, such as fairs, festivals, fun-lectures, pride, with every doubtful amusement; and let its banner be inscribed with honesty, peace, humility, and holiness. Then shall it have power both with God and man. Nothing shall be substituted for pious living, for this we must have. I have no objection to profession, but insist upon a correspondence between such profession and walk. A godly walk and chaste conversation must accompany such profession of piety. We need more invincibles who will "do right though the heavens should fall." We need, must have, men and women who will walk with God. The odor of the lives of such will fill this vale of tears with the sweetest perfume. "Leaving us an example that ye shall follow his steps."—Golden Censer.

"Mine Own Vineyard Have I Not Kept."

Christian sat wistfully watching the sun decline toward the western sea. Heavy clouds floated upward from the horizon, and through the clefts came a glare, lurid and awful. As he gazed, a hushed voice, close at his side, uttered these words: "O Christian! to thee it is made known that yonder sun now bids farewell to thousands!"

Then said Christian, "Let me, I pray thee, make it known to them, that the blood of souls be not upon me."

And the voice replied. "Hast thou not surely known that every sunset is the last to myriads?"

Then said Christian, meekly, "It is the truth; nevertheless, let now thy servant warn them that be doomed, that they may flee for refuge, and blood be not upon me." And he wept sore! Then he looked up, and behold the sun had set.

Then he hastened to go unto those who should never see the morrow. But he found no sign whereby he might know them. In the lazar-house, the sick said, "Comest thou to hasten our end? Are not our woes enough?" Then passed he to the house of vanity, and they said, "Behold this dreamer cometh," and they mocked him. So he came into the streets and lanes of the city, and cried with a loud voice, and warned men to flee from the wrath to come. And men pitied him, and passed by on the other side. Then the day dawned again, and the sun rose high in the heavens, and he went into his own home. As he drew nigh, one met him weeping, and saying, "Alas, master! we have sought thee in vain. Thy son, even thine own son, sleepeth." And Christian smote upon his breast, saying, "I have sinned in that I have forsaken them of mine own house to seek after others, and God hath visited me with sore affliction. They made me a keeper of vineyards, but mine own have I not kept."

EACH drop in the bitter cup is measured out by the unerring hand of the heavenly Physician, who never makes mistakes, nor ceases to watch his patient for one moment.

Unrest and Rest.

A life very full of God's blessing;
A faith only heaven could keep;
A hope well illuming my daytime;
A love keeping watch while I sleep.

So blessed, yet so tired and weary!
The "many things careful about"—
The toiling and spinning of lilies,
The grasshopper burdens without.

So blessed, yet so hardened to blessings!
So troubled, and anxious and tired,
So grieved at the griefs that have hurt me,
I hasten, dear Lord, to thy side.

A bird tired out with its flying,
Yet longing for higher up sky;
A child wearied out with its crying,
Would yet go to its father and cry.

O Father! thou knowest my weakness,
Thou knowest my sins great and small,
Thou knowest for all of the worry,
Thy child is worth nothing at all.

I bring thee the tangle; I made it,
The tangle of life, Father, see—
It is knotted and twisted and broken,
Oh, straighten it all out for me!

It has grown far too dark here to fix it,
My poor eyes but ache with the strain;
But perhaps up in glory 'tis lighter,
Oh, straighten it, Father, again!

I know that the night is for resting,
The darkness shows heaven above,
That the "soul that is full loatheth honey,"
The hungry soul bitterness loves.

So help me to rest in the night time,
Though clouds hide my heaven and thee,
And when I can't help it "dear Father,
Dear Father," come help it for me.

Copied from S. S. Times.

For the COMPANION.

Educate or Perish.

These three words, uttered by some one in regard to the prosperity of our free institutions, have a deep significance in more senses than one. In a country governed by a despot, the ignorance of the masses may be the bliss of the monarch and the stability of the government; but not so in a country like ours, where every man may have a part in making the laws that are to guard and govern us. This is only one of many reasons why every American citizen should be a person of intelligence; and we can readily see the necessity for the spread of general information among the people. This we try to accomplish by means of schools, books, newspapers and other agencies, all of which may be made eminently useful or eminently injurious.

How and where we educate is as important a consideration as whether we educate at all, or not. A wrong education is as bad, if not worse than no education, admitting the latter to be possible. "Learning," says a certain writer, "either frees a man or unchains a devil." The latter is too often the case. The intellect is polished but the heart is allowed to rust. A profound scholar is frequently merely an accomplished scoundrel; and thus our school-houses become shops, where the devisers of mischief serve an apprenticeship and become experts in the science and art of rascality. This need not be so; and, when it is, there is generally something wrong, either in the system of education or in its application. Mental and moral culture should go together; one is a complement of the other, and it is not safe to neglect either.

Pure mental culture may not bring about religious convictions, yet it is favorable to the comprehension of religious truths and to an intelligent discharge of Christian duties. Hence, though the improvement of the intellect will not, of itself, fit us for heaven; yet the wilful neglect of that improvement may be one of the means of debarring us therefrom. Mental culture has given us the Bible in our own tongues and in our own houses, without which many of us would, no doubt, be as ignorant of the teachings of Christ as are the rude, uncivilized nations of the present. Directly or indirectly we owe to education almost every one of the ten thousand blessings that we enjoy over and above what falls to the lot of what we are want to call the "poor heathen in distant lands." This we should not forget—especially, we who "feel to thank God for being born in a land of Bibles and gospel privileges." It is somewhat in the development of the mind as it is in the growth of a plant or tree. For example: The latter may have well-developed branches, without bearing any fruit; yet it cannot bear fruit without branches, developed to some extent; and the more they are developed, the more fruit they can bear. So in regard to intellectual and spiritual life. A man of refinement and education may not be truly a religious man, yet a truly religious man is all the better, and the more influential and useful for being refined and educated.

And now, will not some brother take up this thought and expand it more fully, with a view to show the need of having a good educational institution among us, in order that we may hold and develop, not only the intellect that is now in the church, and that seeks educational facilities, but also that which we can draw into the church by this agency, and by this alone? Hundreds of our young people are now spending their school-days under the moulding influences of other denominations; and hundreds more not wishing to expose themselves to those influences, and having no where else to go, are allowing their God-given faculties to lie dormant, thus curtailing their power, and placing themselves in the centre of a sphere of usefulness that might be a hundred times as large. Our indifference to the want of the intellectual part of our being is a losing game to us as individuals and as a church; and, in my opinion, is a great hindrance to the cause of truth. If so, the neglect must be a criminal one in the eyes of Him who not only endowed us with the noble faculty of intellect, but who also made it susceptible of a high degree of improvement, and placed within our reach all necessary means for its successful and harmonious culture.

J. ZUCK, JR.

Lebanon, Ohio.

The Law of Love.

Said an old man one day—"When I look back over the long pilgrimage of an eventful and not unsuccessful life, I can confidently say that I never did a kindness to any human being without finding myself the happier for it afterward. A single, friendly act, cheerfully, pleasantly, and promptly done to a fellow-creature in trouble or difficulty, besides the good to him, has before now thrown a streak of sunshine into my heart for the remainder of the day, which I would not have taken a twenty dollar bank note for."

If such acts of thoughtfulness and consideration and humane sympathy were performed as we "have opportunity," the same "streak of sunshine," the lightening up of the load of life, would come to both giver and receiver, until after awhile there would be sunshine all the time within us and without, dispersing physical as well as moral miasms, purifying the social and domestic atmosphere, warming the heart to still higher sympathies, and waking up the whole man to those activities which can never fail to preserve, maintain, and perpetuate mental, moral, and physical health, to a serene old age. These things are to be done at home and abroad, at the family table, the fireside, in the street, on the highway, in town, in the country, by day and by night, always and everywhere, kindly and cheerily, wherever there is "opportunity;" to be done to the old and the young, to the rich and to the poor, to the sick and the well, to the successful and the unfortunate, to stranger and acquaintance, to man and woman, enemy and friend, to everybody and everything that breaths the breath of life. These sunlight-giving kindnesses can be done in multitudes of cases by a word, a smile, a look. And these cost so little, why should they not be thrown broadcast over the whole surface of humanity, in princely profusion, blessing as they do the giver as well as the receiver, giving gladness to both, and a quiet peace which gold could never purchase, which diamonds of the purest water and gems of richest hue could not secure for the briefest hour? Men, women, children, all, wake up from this good hour, and make the "law of love" to all human kind the polestar of life, the work, the pleasure of your human existence.—Hall's Journal of Health.

For the COMPANION.

Our Periodicals.

What is the aim and object of our periodicals? A brother in a letter to me writes. "That the prompting cause for originating our periodicals was, as means of greater harmony and purity in the church, and that it is not owing to them that the unpleasantness has arisen which is so much deprecated; but to the growing tendency to wander from the old land marks, to differ in view and in practice:" also that "we should try and not only keep up the original tone of the periodicals, but improve them more and more."

We all know that the press is powerful for good or evil: powerful in disseminating truth, and also in disseminating false doctrine, broadcast over the land. But if for truth, how many a family may receive admonitions? how many sinners called to repentance? how many stray lambs brought back to the fold? and how many a follower of the Lamb cheered on his way? all to us is unknown; but, no doubt, the number is great, if the periodicals come to us in the true Spirit of Christ; that is, if the communications of the brethren savor of salt, so that all may receive benefit thereby. But we know that nothing is perfect on this side of the grave. Man is imperfect, and, therefore, his writings will frequently fail of the object for which they are designed. But we should all try and have a perfect will, try to stay as near the word of God as possible; and then by the grace of God hope to be saved. And if imperfections appear in our periodicals, take the advice of the apostle—"Judge all things, and hold fast to that which is good:" for I do not believe that the aim of all our brethren is to keep up the spirit of love among the brethren; and I have cause to believe so by the spirit of the communications. I have often wandered what such brethren mean. Some seem to be satisfied with nothing, save themselves, straining at what to them seem imperfections.

The A. M. has received its share of ridicule, and why is it? Why not abide by its decisions, and if not satisfied, bring it forward in the regular order, and if it can be changed for the better, give God the glory? If not, use charity and do not let us become proud in our own estimation, and think ourselves wiser than every one else.

If so much dissatisfaction is manifested in our periodicals, and as is frequently the case that a penitent sinner seeks the folds of Christ, and such things meet his eye, he must surely come to the conclusion that we are not of that fold; for "a kingdom which rises against itself cannot stand." I believe truly, that many are driven away, which, if they would see more love, would not only be of us but of Christ.

Let us therefore beware, brethren, how we use our talents, that they may not rise up in judgment against us, but bear fruit, that we may live thereof. Let the object of our periodicals be acquired. Let greater harmony and purity be in the church.

I have written in love, and the saying is, that "a word to the wise is sufficient." "Judge ye, therefore, and hold fast to that which is good."

CYRUS BUCHER.

Shaefferstown, Pa.

For the COMPANION.

Committees.

Is the sending of committees from the Annual Meeting the best and cheapest mode to dispose of the difficulties that arise in the churches? To aid in solving this question, if the COMPANION will permit, I will try to give a little experience of the Antioch Church, in the workings of Committees. Our experience as to benefits and expenditures ought to be of some value; for a committee was sent from A. M. to our church last year and also this year.

The first came by the request of a few petitioners, who complained that the church was proud and was departing from ancient land marks. The committee seemed to sustain this complaint, and decided that the church should come to the general order of the brotherhood. There was a vagueness in this decision, that caused not a little discussion as to its meaning. What is the general order of the Brethren? The complaint was that we were proud, and had departed from the ancient order in our mode of dress. General order of the Brethren. What does it mean? Does it mean the common order, or method of dress among the brethren? If this is the meaning, we thought the Antioch church will not have far to go, "to come to the general order," as we see common in many churches. But if by "general order of the Brethren" is meant an ordinance or creed, which sets forth a particular style of dress, then perhaps we are not in that order.

To find this ordinance, if there was one, a "query" was presented to our church, and carried by our delegates to the District Meeting of the Middle District of Indiana, presented, and by this meeting ordered to be sent to the A. M. We have been informed that this query was not regularly presented to the Annual Council. The officers of the District Meeting, or the delegates to the A. M., are certainly responsible for the irregularities. An explanation from those who know is much desired.

I have not a copy of this last query, but think the signification was, whether the church would make the wearing of a round coat by the brethren and the wearing of a plain cap by the sisters, tests of Christian fellowship.

If the loss of the query had been the only loss we sustained, I would not have penned these lines. But some one, or body, who exercised authority, turned our query into a petition, or, if not this, our query was interpreted to mean that we were much out of order and should be corrected.

Upon these representations the last A. M. appointed another committee which visited our church in August last. The committee in explaining to the church why they had come, stated, that the delegate from the Middle District of Indiana, reported to the standing committee, that the Antioch church had made no improvement, for the better since the visit of the committee of last year, but was even worse. It was also said that a witness stated that the report was true. To know from whom the delegate received the information, and who the witness was, would give light upon a subject that would be serviceable for future use. But as to the facts, I will give the testimony of a brother who was a member of both committees. This witness stated to the committee, in the presence of the church, that there was a marked change for the better in the church. Very good evidence that the delegate and witness were misinformed as to our state.

As the committee was appointed upon charges that were groundless, and as there was no case to try, some of us agreed that the committee ought not to judge, when there was no case to adjudge. However a large majority of the church agreed for the committee to act. Some time was spent in trying to find grievances that were heard of, but they were not found. The committee manifested a kind Christian spirit in all they said and did and made no attempt to lord it over God's heritage. But I do not like a party to bring suit by prefering charges and then failing to sustain them be allowed to dodge the cost and leave the innocent to pay the expenses. I am not one of the innocents who helped to pay this cost. The petitioners paid the expense of the first committee which was $42.00, I think. The church—or some of the members—paid the last committee $28.00.

If I write again upon this question I will try to give what effect the committee have had with the church.

S. M. MINNICH.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Oct. 7, 1873.

Our Eastern Visit.

Among the curiosities of our visit to Philadelphia, that is worthy of mention, is the Institute for the Instruction of Deaf Mutes. There is a much greater number of this class of unfortunates in the country than is generally supposed. This institution alone accommodates over two hundred children. It is very gratifying to witness how well they may be trained to communicate with each other. But they do not only communicate with each other; they are taught the art of reading and writing, almost to perfection. By this means their friends are enabled to converse with them upon any subject. It is interesting to have them relate what ideas they had of themselves, the world, and things in general, before they were set in communication with the rest of humanity. Several years ago we accompanied a lad of twelve years of age to this school, a son of brother Daniel Paul of Blair county, who has been a constant attendant since. He has now learned to write with a rapidity and accuracy that is, considering his unfortunate condition, really astounding. By being able to read and having access to newspapers, he is pretty well posted upon the general topics of the day, and enjoys life about as well as his more favored brethren. Some of our readers may suppose that this school would be a dull and dreary place; but it is not. Although the mutes cannot hear or speak, they nearly all are in the habit of making some kind of noise, in their plays, and during their conversations by motions and signs. They especially enjoy a hearty laugh, and one said to us: "I love so laugh." And it appears to us that they are generally of a genial disposition, and fond of good humor. And as noise does not interrupt the other students, they are suffered to laugh when they feel like it, and consequently peals of merriment are frequently heard from all parts of the building.

But they have also religious exercises. Then all are quiet and orderly. Their leader appears on a platform where all can plainly see him, for all depends upon sight. By the sign method he addresses them, and offers up their prayers.

Everything appears to be done for their comfort and instruction that could be expected or desired. And we do hope that parents who may have children of this class of unfortunates will not fail to avail themselves of the advantages of this benevolent institution. Three or four years' education in this school, is worth more to them than forty thousand dollars in gold. We will cheerfully lend our aid, in any possible manner, to secure the admission of mute children to this, or any other school of the kind.

We also visited the Blind Asylum. Truly it makes one's heart swell with gratitude to God, and fills one with love and confidence toward "depraved" humanity, to interview the benevolent institutions that are being erected through the generosity of man. It seems to us that there is no way by which a man can realize so much and such perfect satisfaction in the distribution of his effects, as by bestowing them upon such charitable enterprises. He at once becomes a benefactor to the world, and if done in charity, bids fair to become an heir of immortal bliss. Would it not be a brilliant light to the world, and one that would shine into many dark places, if our Brethren would establish and endow an institution of this kind? At all events, we ought to have an interest in those which the world is erecting, for we are certainly safe in joining them in every good work.

The blind are taught to read by feeling; the words being printed by raised letters. The Bible and other books are printed in this way, and they are taught to read quite readily. They have also type with short spurs set in the shape of the letters, with which they pierce the paper. This writing the blind can read by the touch of the fingers. They are also taught to write in the ordinary way, to their friends who can see, and perhaps most of their correspondence is conducted in this way, and read to the blind by a friend.

The Asylum is large and arranged for comfort. It has also several industrial departments, in which the inmates, who are otherwise in the enjoyment of good health, are taught to work. Among them are Broom, Brush, Matress, and Carpet Manufactories, and it is marvelous to observe how well they perform their work.

The principle method of amusement among the blind is vocal and instrumental music, in which some of them become quite expert. Almost every room has a musical instrument, and everywhere one's ears are saluted with melodious sounds.

We spent a few hours pleasantly, and we think not without profit, in looking over the building, and in conversation with the blind. Hope that our visit may have influence upon our young companions, our readers, and ourself, which will lead us to appreciate more highly the senses we enjoy. O, that our eyes, our ears, and our tongues might always be employed usefully, to the honor of God from whom we have received them.

We also visited the Academy of Natural Science, the Musem, and Fairmount Park, where the wonders of Nature and Art were unfolded to us, in endless variety. They were schools to our young sisters, but our time was too short to get any of the lessons perfectly. Several days should be devoted to each place, to be much benefitted by the observations. We have only learned practically that there is much to learn.

We also visited the poorer portion of the city, and had our sympathies aroused for poverty and degradation. What is most remarkable is that they dwell so close by opulence and refinement. There is a great contrast between Chestnut street and Bedford street, though they are only a few squares apart. There is a vast field for missionary labor in the southern portion of Philadelphia. We think the city might wisely apply some of its enormous appropriations to the improvement of that part of the city. However, we are not prepared to suggest a plan by which it could be successfully accomplished. It is possible that nothing but fire will afford the virtue required to purify the domain, though undoubtedly soap and talent could be profitably appropriated.

We also made a short visit to New York, but had very little satisfaction, owing to the short time we were permitted to tarry there. All that we saw that is noteworthy, was the busy Broadway, with its constantly rapidly moving throngs, and a view of the great Atlantic Ocean, with rolling waves constantly dashing upon the shores. It did inspire us with a momentary eloquence, but as it has flown we will not attempt a description of the vast deep.

We stopped at the business place of our young brother Kittinger, but at an hour when he was not in, and so we did not get to see him.

On Thursday evening (18th), Sunday forenoon, Sunday evening, and Monday evening we tried to preach for the Brethren in their new meeting-house, in Philadelphia. The week-day meetings were rather small, but all the while the attention was good.

We visited the families of brethren Fry, Hunsbarger, Thomas, Hagey, and Harley, and received much kindness everywhere.

We had also expected to visit Norristown, Coventry, to spend a night with our aged brother, Isaac Price, also to visit brother Abraham H. Cassel, with whom we have long desired to devote some time. We had also partly promised to stop off at Lancaster; but the time for our return came too soon for us.

On Wednesday we left the city. At Mifflin we stopped off and were met by our young friend Harry Shellenberger, and conveyed to his house, who still resides with his father, brother Benjamin Shellenberger, about six miles south of Mifflin. Here we were well entertained in every way. Brother Christian Meyers and another brother also spent the evening with us, and we had a pleasant, social meeting. Next morning we were returned to the station in time for the early train, which was an hour late, and so we missed the connection at Huntingdon. This afforded our brother Dr. Brumbaugh an opportunity of being troubled with us again. Next day evening we arrived safely home. Our assistant editor, brother Beer, had taken the morning train to meet an appointment in Armstrong county, and so we found it necessary to proceed to business forthwith, and we have been required to be closely engaged since. But at intervals we find time to think of our pleasant visit to Philadelphia, and the happy hours we spent at our city home, at brother Spanogle's.

To Contributors.

Of live matter, our manuscript box is getting rather low, and we should be pleased to have a re-enforcement in the ranks of contributors, and a revival among old and new, that our columns may be filled with fresh matter, warm from the hearts of the authors. Let us close the volume, which will be the last under the present administration, zealously, and as peaceably as possible We are solicitous that our editorial sun should set harmoniously if possible, but in full activity at all events. Let us be found at our posts, engaged in the Master's service to the very last moment. We want to die in active service.

We should be pleased to have essays, of admonitions to duty, to love and good works, upon subjects upon which we all agree, or at least ought to agree. Let us try for awhile to see who can be the least among us. When we wish matter of this kind we are almost invariably compelled to select it from other papers or books, and not unfrequently find the very best in the secular newspapers. When we turn to the other religious papers, we find them, like our own, filled with denominational intelligence or controversial matter, subjects in which the general reader takes but little interest. It would give us pleasure to lay before our readers essays which admonish us to deeds of charity, works of righteousness, and to a life of holiness. Our brethren and sisters believe in these doctrines, and our ministers teach them, then why not advocate and elucidate them through our columns. "Reproof and correction" are necessary, but they cannot take the place of admonitions.

Our Western Trip.

It has now been finally agreed upon to set out upon our western visit, on the eighth inst. Our first stopping place will be at Waterloo, Iowa, where we expect to attend the communion meeting, on the 11th and 12th. After spending some time there, and in the surrounding country we will return to Burlington, and proceed west as far as Kearney Junction, Nebraska. We will spend some time in Nebraska, in such a way as the circumstances may direct. We expect to make some calls on our homeward way, and hope to return not later than the first of December. Mail matter will reach us by being addressed to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in care of Daniel Holsinger, up to the last of October. Farther directions will be given from time to time, as we shall know in advance.

In the meantime all moneys due us may be forwarded to our address at Dale City, Somerset county, Pa., and it is very necessary that this should be done as soon as possible. We may find it necessary to draw on the office to enable us to return home. Let this have the attention of all who are interested.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Query.

St. Mark 15:11. "But the chief priest moved the people that he should rather release Barabbas unto them." Was Barabbas one of the two thieves that was crucified with our Savior? An explanation is required through the Companion. D. B. Zook.

Perhaps he was, perhaps not. We have no account of it whether he was or was not. Not knowing we cannot say; not interested we do not care to find out.—Editor.

Dear Brother:

I have read your paper for two years, and like it very much. May I say a few words? Had I known sister Knouff's address I should have written to her. She answered in the spirit of love. One dear brother thought it not right to have Sabbath-schools; it would make the children vain; but thought it right to boil sugar-water on Sabbath afternoon. Dear brethren, our children want recreation, and there will take it. I have raised five sons. I advocate Sabbath-schools. When harvest is over I would give them a holiday for their hard work. I would put a big boy in front with a flag, with big letters, "Holiness to the Lord," with a basket of victuals and a bottle of milk for the little ones. To see the sparkling of the eye and the joyous laugh, would pay for all. Your sister in love.

L. Rosbrook.

Harmon, Ill.

Brother Holsinger: As brother D. P. Sayler asks me some questions, and wants to reason with me, I hope you will give me and every other intermeddling scribbler, room in your Press of Liberty.

Brother D. P. Sayler, I thank you for your letter in last week's C. F. C. I much wish to go to our lovefeast the 4th of Oct., and as a good many of the Western members take the Companion, and read your letter, I feared they would think me out of order to surround the table with them.

You ask several questions which I will try to answer briefly.

1. Why I felt a coolness toward those sisters who did not wear caps? Because I was traditionized and did not know it.

What changed my mind.

They gave me so many things without money and without price, of the very best they had, (we were poor), they taught me such lessons of benevolence that I never forgot. I saw, as I thought, that there could be saints without caps. They did not slight me because I wore finer clothes than they did. The elder's wife, with whom we lived, said to me: I am afraid some of the members will take offence at your fine clothes. I said the sisters in Md. wear such clothes, and they are as good as can be found anywhere—that is the way tradition runs; but after awhile I saw that costly array was forbidden. But it took me 25 years to see that caps are not a command. In reasoning and reading Paul's letter on head covering, to sisters, they would say: well, but I wear a covering and that is what the Testament says. So I felt that they leaned on the word of God and I on custom. I felt, perceptibly, that they had the best side of the question. I tried to turn to the more weighty matters, to walk humbly and love mercy. About those sisters who were disowned for not wearing caps, there were letters in the C. F. C. about a year or more ago. I have looked over the Companion, what I have here, but cannot find it, and have forgot the place. Elder F. P. Loehr, of Bloomingdale, Mich., knows, for he replied to one of them. You can see a similarity to the case in the August No. of G. V. I feel like a good old sister said to me (who always wore a plain cap), I would like to see the sisters wear plain caps, but I want them to do it in faith and of a free will. If I am wrong I am ready for correction.

Hannah Knouff.

"On the Simplicity of Dress."

Editor Christian Family Companion: I select the following article on The simplicity of dress from the Baltimore American, published in Baltimore on Friday, August 20th, 1773, then called the Maryland Journal and Baltimore Advertizer. It was the first number of the paper which has now attained such popularity and influence, that I would not give the morality it teaches for all the religion of all our popular religious papers in the country combined.

"That a plain dress is the best ornament of a beautiful woman, I had lately a most convincing proof. The neatness of a daughter of that religious sect called Quakers, in one of the public walks, caught my eye—never was innocence and elegance more sweetly portrayed. But when I had an opportunity of beholding her face, my astonishment and delight were inexpressible. Her complexion was lovely; her eyes, sparkling; her teeth and lips, such as Reynolds only can imagine; and her smile, an emanation of divinity. I contemplated her person with a pleasure till then unknown, and should have pronounced her the most finished work of heaven, but that it occurred to me, that many of my fair country women appeared inferior to her, from only not being satisfied with what heaven had made them—tortured hair, a superfluity of ribbons, idle jewels, &c., &c.—were, though meant for so many additions, only so many disadvantages to them, by preventing the eye from judging rightly of their charms, or indeed beholding them through the happiest of all mediums—the medium of simplicity. In short, I am convinced that some Deity, in his wrath, suffered them to be betrayed into this dressing folly; from which I most heartily wish that some sensible mortal would endeavor to reclaim them."—Lover of Nature.

So, brethren, wrote this Lover of Nature one hundred years ago. If he then thought that some "Deity in his wrath had suffered women to be betrayed into this dressing folly," what would he conclude if he now saw the dressing folly in women? but if it then occurred to him that many of his fair country-women appeared inferior to this one whom he was ready to pronounce "the most finished work of heaven," only because they were not "satisfied with what heaven had made them," what would occur to him if he saw saw his "fair country-women" now? The hearty wish of this Lover of Nature, a century ago, was, "that some sensible mortal would endeavor to reclaim them," from the dressing folly. What say Christian mothers who keep it on their little innocent offsprings while yet in the crib? And those brethren, preachers, and sisters, who can see no harm in it, and even advocate, and defend it? Those who can remember the dressing folly of only fifty years ago, and contrast it with the present, can imagine the surprise of this Lover of Nature, of one hundred years ago, if he ever returned to his former home to see the follies of the present times.

D. P. Sayler.

An Answer.

"A Brother" wishes an answer to two queries, he says, were asked on page 173. I will give my poor opinion on them. In regard to the first, I do not think it right to be very lavish in our expenditures upon our property, any more than on our persons, for, if we have no abundance of this world's goods, there are plenty of the brethren who would be glad to receive what we have to spare, to help build places of worship; and to relieve cases of distress. "He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord," and the interest He pays is more than any one in this world is able to pay, "for the gift of God is eternal life."

The second is one I have thought of a great deal, if our sisters who dress plainly would stop to think of the inconsistency of decking their children in conformity with the world, they would not do it. The remark has been made by outsiders, in my hearing, "how gaily those plain people dress their children. There is no consistency there. If they allow them to dress that way now, there will soon be no plain members, for the love of dress will grow with their growth, and if their mothers thought it right for them before they were able to judge for themselves, they will consider it right ever after, for it is much easier to learn evil than good. And in training a child we cannot commence too soon, for they are "born in sin." I would not wish children dressed in the same colors and styles that their parents wear, but let their hats or bonnets be without flowers or feathers, and their dresses without ruffles or sashes, three things that are utterly useless for any one, and which when put on little ones take from them the look of innocence that belongs to them. And where does the responsibility rest? Mothers, stop and think, for it is you that have the training and dressing of the children, and while you set the example of plainness by dressing so, your children's appearance says to the world, you do not preach what you practice, or else your children would be taught plainness, by your giving them only such things to wear. "Let your adorning be a meek and quiet spirit." "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."

A SISTER.

Feet Washing.

"If I then, your Lord and master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash oneanother's feet, for I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you."

We find in the same chapter, namely John 13th, that "he riseth from supper, took a towel and girded himself and began to wash his disciples' feet and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded." From the above quotations we learn that it is obligatory to observe this ordinance, and as Jesus is the way, the truth, and the life, we have no way to secure our salvation but to flee to him for refuge, and take his word as our guide. I have been in the church for over five years, and have attended many Lovefeasts, and in all this time have but once washed my brethren's feet. Sometimes I can go and take a towel and wipe and not wash, and sometimes wash and not wipe. I can not see that this is quite right. "Ye should do as I have done to you." He did not wash and John or some one else wipe their feet, but he washed and wiped them himself, as I understand the Brethren in some parts of the world practice. I understand they practice it in this way, one riseth and takes a towel and girds himself and washes his brother's feet and wipes them with the towel wherewith he is girded; then this brother that is washed riseth in like manner, girds himself, and washes his brother's feet, or the feet of the same brother that washed his feet. If I understand the 15th verse of this chapter I think that this mode comes nearer to the example of Jesus. The way we practice it here one might be a member all his or her life and never wash and wipe the saints' feet, and go through all the rest of the ordinances. I do not intend this to change the order they have here, but I want information on the subject. I hope some brother or sister will take up the subject and explain it in full, that I may understand the reason of this mode they practice here. If I am in error I want to know it. I hope that we may at some time all see and understand alike; all be be of the same mind and all speak the same thing, and all go together hand in hand, bound together by the golden chain of love, and fight valiantly the battles of the Lord.

G. B. SHIVELY.

Bourbon, Ind.

To Our Sister.

Sister H. KNOUFF; you are becoming somewhat popular, since brother D. P. Sayler has been reproaching you so harshly. I would like to talk to you face to face, on the all-important subject of religion—of the Christian religion. I am so well pleased to find you stay so close to the Bible. You will find in COMPANION No. 34, page 542, a short article with my name signed to it. In the fifth line, you will read "strange reason" which should read "strong reasons." It was my mistake or the printer's. At any rate I did not intend to convey that idea. I did really think you gave Bible reasons for the position you took. You just put me in mind of the Savior, when he was tempted of Satan; he just cited him to what was written, and the enemy left him. I understand you to say you wear a plain cap. Well that is a very nice covering, only do not contend with your sisters that have the same right from the Bible to wear a plain bonnet, as well as you have for a cap, as the Bible only says a covering. We should not be wise above that which is written. The consequence will be you will live in peace and union. If the design of the inspired apostle would have been that the sisters should all wear one special kind of covering, he could have named it. But he knew his own business best; he just left this as he knew was best for the church. In 2 Thess. 2: 15, we read that the disciples were commanded to hold fast to the traditions as they were taught, whether by word or epistle. In that day the word existed in the words and epistles of inspired men. Now we have it in the shape of a perfect law, as James says. Just think, sister, when a law is perfect how men could go about to make it better. When anything is perfect then anything added or diminished will only adulterate it. You may find some men that claim that the Bible is silent on some points that are essential to salvation, or the well-being of the church. But these are only assertions; this has never yet been proven by any one.

Dear sister, one thing makes me think a great deal, and that is this, the attempt is being made by some to cut us off from the privilege of the press. I speak of us that claim that the Bible is a perfect rule of faith and practice, to govern the church. We frequently hear men speak of the Bible and the order of the Brethren. It sounds like as if the order of the Bible was not sufficient: or that, as if the Bible had one order, and the Brethren another. Let us hold fast to the order of the Bible. I think that will be safe ground for us to stand upon; and sister I wish you would have been at our meeting to-day, and seen all our sisters with their plain sun-bonnets, and the good feeling that existed among them. I think you would have said that the Spirit of the Lord was with them, as well as with the Iowa sisters. We sometimes hear it said that the order of the Brethren works well with the Bible. So it does; but the Bible alone works far better. Let us bear with things as they are, but live in hope that our old fathers will go to our next Annual Meeting with their Bibles open in hand, and read out them, and say that it is good enough without any other rules. Sister, I wish you would get as many subscribers for the COMPANION as you can; it does not make any trouble here with us, as was intimated at the A. M., but does us a great deal of good.

M. HOKE.

Huntington, Ind.

Dear brethren and sisters; We now have the reporter, and we all seem to rejoice. Now let us be careful when we speak, to give, "thus saith the Lord;" and when you cannot give "thus saith the Lord," say, as Paul said, "I speak this of myself; not the Lord." Very appropriate to say "I," when I speak, and the Lord, when the Lord speaks.

A word to my dear, dear sisters in Iowa. Do not think, Paul had not the Lord for what he commanded: if it would have been his own, he would have told us so. If you cannot put that peculiar covering on for the man, do it because of the angels. We read in the Revelations: "An angel came and stood at the altar, and there was given him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand." Your prayers will go through the angel's hands to God. Let your covering be not for convenience; but for the express purpose to come before God. We some times wonder why; but if it was a matter of sight it would be no more faith, "We shall know hereafter."

Some wonder why we should have a lamb to constitute the Lord's supper. Because the Lord said so. "Go ye and prepare for us the passover that we may eat. And the disciples did as they were commanded." Every Bible reader knows that was a lamb. Luther says "the Easter lamb;" again, "the Pascal lamb"—Passover lamb. But that looks too much like a Jewish passover. It makes no difference whether it looks Jewish or Gentilish, the Lord has commanded it. The Jews were very particular how they prepared theirs; and the very time Jesus cried out "It is finished," was the time for the Jews to kill their passover. The disciples were commanded to "kill and prepare, that we may eat." Nothing said how to prepare.

John calls it a supper. Supper only designates time. Surely it was a supper, for the other three say: "Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve." Paul called it the Lord's supper. Commanded by the Lord, prepared, made ready, by the disciples, for the Lord, surely it is the Lord's. And when Paul was reasoning with his Corinthian brethren, in that same chapter, he took them back to the same night in which he was betrayed. There is our pattern and our example.

But it was called a feast of charity. Surely it was a feast to both soul and body. And when the traitor was gone out, Jesus commanded his disciples to love one another, as he had loved them. O! think of the love of Jesus, that we may love one another more than we do. Calling it a feast of charity, does not make any change in it; for where God is there is charity.

We know why it was called passover in the Old Testament; but why leave the name stand in the New? We read in the Revelations, "There were seven angels to pass over the earth. It was commanded them, that they should not hurt any green thing: neither any tree, only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads. In those days men shall seek death and shall not find it." Those that have the Father's name written in their foreheads, the destroying angel shall pass over. In the land of Egypt they could die and did die; but now they shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them. Let us keep the commandments, and we "shall know hereafter."

"But," says my friend, "The disciples killed and prepared it, yet I don't believe Jesus ever eat it. He only left his disciples under that impression." Three witnesses testify that he did eat. Did you ever read in your Bible that God ever deceived his people, or that he said one thing, and meant another? Jesus says: "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would not have told you. I go to prepare a place, that where I am, ye may be also." Suppose he only left us under that impression, where would our hopes of heaven be? I will tell you, my dear friends, what I believe. I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and, that he brought from heaven a saving gospel, and every word he said is true, and every promise he made he will fulfil.

HANNAH ROOP.

Linganore, Md.

To Brethren Who can Travel.

There are five churches in Southern Ohio, south of the main lines of travel, and in consequence of this fact we are not often visited by brethren in passing east or west. We should be very glad, however, to have them call at any time that may suit their convenience, but more especially during our communion seasons. That season will soon come again and we invite any and all who can come this way to do so, so that we may be comforted by the mutual faith both you and us.

The meeting in Twin Valley, Ross county, Ohio, will be October 11th and 12th, Railway station, Linda, on the Marietta and Cincinnati R. R. White Oak church, Highland county, Ohio, expected October 18th and 19th. Bush Creek church, Highland county, Ohio, Oct. 25th to 27th, communion on the 27th. Others are expected to be near the same time. There are many brethren and sisters in these churches from Pa. and Va., who would rejoice to meet their old friends once more in the Lord's house. Consider and accept of our invitation to come.

LANDON WEST.

Sinking Springs, O.

To the Crossbearing.

Christ chose to himself brethren with whom he was in company, but in our days faith is getting so weak, and those who will follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, are few and far between, so that it appears as if one has to stand alone upon earth.

It was thought, not long ago, there never was such a fool as myself. I still pointed them to Christ, after whom I was named, and whom I had promised before many witnesses to follow as near as wisdom and ability would be given me. (Lord give us grace to be faithful unto the end). But now it has pleased the Lord to give us light to see in the far distance through the COMPANION and a few other instruments, where we can see here and there such ones who for Christ's sake are willing to walk in the path of rectitude, which gives great strength to the almost weary. We know that we shall meet and enjoy each other's society forever. We look forward to that meeting and praise the Lord for the same. There our praise shall continue! O that there were more Christians desirous to know "what lack I yet?" and then trust the loving Savior's advice; there would be more souls praising the goodness and greatness of God.

From your unworthy

SISTER.

Berlin, Canada.

Brother Henry:

I send you a list of names, hoping to aid you in your great work for the good of the brotherhood. I do not believe there ever was a paper published that has done as much good, and brought joy to as many households as the C. F. C. It has become a welcome messenger to many; it has caused light to shine in dark places, it has made many souls glad in the far West, who have left their brethren and relatives. I say it makes them rejoice to hear from those whom they left back. I once lived in the West, I know that I had a sympathy for my eastern acquaintances.

Many persons read but do not reflect what labor, patience, vexation, and anxiety the editor has to endure before they can read the articles they do read. I was in the printing business myself once, and I can sympathize with you in your labors.

Now to get up the almanac looks like a very small matter while reading over it; but to project and print it is what thousands of people know nothing about.

Hoping you may be successful in your undertaking, I wish you every prosperity in time and eternity.

DR. F. C. RENNER.

New Midway, Md.

Announcements.

Communion meeting in the Raccoon Creek church, Montgomery county, Ind., at our meeting-house, one and a half miles west of Ladoga, on the 17th of October.

MATHIAS FRANTZ.

Lovefeast on the 25th and 26th of October, at 10 o'clock, at the house of brother Elijah Holloway, five miles northwest of Marion Centre, Marion county, Kansas. This will be the first ever held in the county. Special request for the brethren from the East to be with us. Stop off at Florence; on the Atchison and Topeka Railroad, thence by hack to Marion Centre.

JOS. M. ELLIOTT.

LOVE-FEASTS.

Near Greenfield, Howard county, Kan. Oct. 18, and 19.

Cold Water, Green, Butler county, Iowa, Oct. 8, and 9th.

Four miles south of Waterloo, Iowa, Oct. 11, 12.

Coal Creek, Fulton Co., Ill. Oct. 8.

Salem, Marion Co., Ill. Oct. 11.

Bachelor Run, Carroll Co., Ind., Oct. 25.

Sam's Creek, Md., October, 11,

Monocacy, Md., October, 17.

Meadow Branch, Md., Oct. 21.

Beaver Dam, Md., Oct. 25.

Three miles northeast of Monticello, White county, Ind., Oct. 10.

Dry Creek, Linn county, Iowa, Nov. 1, and 2.

Six miles west of Cussies station, Merced county, Cal.

Rock River, Lee county, Ill., Oct. 8, and 9.

Salomony Arm, Huntington, Ind., Oct. 28.

Four Mile, Union county, Ind., Oct. 10, and 11.

Panther Creek, Iowa, Oct. 4, and 5.

Duncansville, Blair, county, Pa., Oct. 7, and 8.

Buffalo, Valley, Union county, Pa., Oct. 30.

Fairview, Appanoose county, Iowa, Oct. 31.

MARRIED.

At the residence of the undersigned, on the 24th of Sept., Mr. AMOS K. FLORA, of Howard county, Ind., and sister SALOME FIANT of Miami county, Ind.

JOHN P. WOLF.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Brother ANDREW J. SPARKS, was born in Rush county, Ind., June 15th, 1834, and died near Markle, Wells Co., Ind., April 28th; aged 38 years, 10 months and 13 days. He filled the office of deacon two years, was then elected to the ministry, in which he served up to the time of his death. He died with a glorious hope: his last words were, "I want nothing but my Savior." He was the father of seven children, and leaves a wife and five children to mourn their loss. He was sick only about 12 hours. Disease spotted fever; Occasion improved by Elder Samuel Murray and the writer, from Job 14: 14. Lonesome hours attend our dear sister and the kind children. In their behalf we earnestly solicit the prayers of the church, that they with us all may be permitted through Divine grace to fully qualify ourselves that when called upon to depart this life, we may look forward beyond the grave with a bright anticipation of a glorious immortality.

WM. M. HAMILTON.

In the Elk Lick congregation, Sept. 23, friend ABRAHAM BROWN, aged 40 years, 7 months and 1 day. Deceased came to an untimely death, by accident. On Sept. 20th inst, he fell backwards from a spring-wagon, on the solid road, dislocating the spinal column between his shoulders, and inflicting other injuries. A neighbor fell with him, receiving similar injuries, but not so serious. Hopes are entertained of his recovery. Funeral occasion improved by brethren Jonathan Kelso and Cornelius Berkley, from Matth. 24: 44.

In Fayette county, W. Va., Sept. 12th, IDA MAY MASTERS, daughter of brother Charles and sister Charlotte, aged 5 months. Another bright gem called for the kingdom of heaven: "For of such is the kingdom of heaven."

J. S. FLORY.

WE will admit a limited number of selete advertisements at the following rates
One Insertion, 20 cents a line.
Each subsequent Insertion 15 cents a line.
Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.
No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS.

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.

EDW'D J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen,
YORK, PA

THE "SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS,

Manufactured by E. P. Needham & Son, 143, 145 & 147 East 23d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passengers Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:

MT. DALLAS ACCOM., at 7: 50 A. M.

HUNTINGDON EXPRESS at 2: 55 P. M.

RETURNING.

EXPRESS, leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.

ACCOMMODATION, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. in time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c.

W. H. BROWN, Supt.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE
By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.

This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works. "NIGHT SCENES," and "OUR FATHER'S HOUSE," nearly 100,000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. ZEIGLER & M'CURDY, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,

J. H. MOORE,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

Farm For Sale.

Guardian sale of 1 9 acres of choice land. Will be sold at public sale Tuesday, Sept. 23d, 1873. Well located, well watered, good improvements, bank barn, brick house, with all the necessary out-buildings; situated only 5 miles from good market; located in the western part of Milton Township, about midway between Smithville on the south and Pike Station on the A. & G. W. R. R., in Wayne county, Ohio, known as the Pinkerton farm. DAVID LYTLE.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2.50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARICE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-tf.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlinear Word-for-word English Translation. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. WILLIAM AIKMAN, D. D. $1.50.

Man, in Genesis and in Geology; or the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. WELLS. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporancous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Aims and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By GEORGE COMBE. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs. Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structnre and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the trne Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid,	1.25
Per dozen " "	13.30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 60 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bonnd in boards. New and old tnnes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to mnsic in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC. Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains snch a variety of metres, that a tnne may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1.25 per copy, postpaid, or $10.00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$2.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	2.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25
32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION.	25
BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.	$1.70
Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Moomaw, prepaid,	.75
Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid,	.75
12 copies, by Express.	7.00
Pious Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid,	.45
Browns Pocket Concordance,	.60
German & English Testaments,	.75
NEAD'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid,	1.45
" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid	1.40
COMPANION Volume 3, bonnd post paid,	$2.7
Reserved at the office,	2.25

HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco To ministers on Tobacco, Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63, Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interest.

208 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,

431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

Will fill orders for Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or PANACEA West of Ohio.

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.

Waynesboro, Franklin Co. Pa.

Will control the Eastern and South rn States. All letters should be carefully directed as above, and letters containing money must be registered.

This year was more favorable for curing herbs than any other for ten years, the medicine is therefore warrented perfect.

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, OCT. 14, 1873. NUMBER 41.

A Fine Sermon "Smushed."

The following actual incident was related by Bro. Shaw in one of his discourses in this city. as illustrative of the modern practice of spiritualizing texts of Scripture, and giving them a meaning foreign to that intended by the inspired writers.

A young preacher—a graduate of one of the theological schools of the country—preached a very nice discourse from the following words: "Then, fearing lest they should fall upon rocks, they cast four anchors out from the stern, and wished for day." Acts 27: 29.

Said the young preacher, "The ship represents the church. The four anchors are Faith, Hope, Love, and Prayer. Christians are the crew. The sea represents the great ocean of life. The storm that prevailed is the trials to which we are incident here, and the island of Melita, where 'they all escaped to land,' means Heaven." The preacher dwelt with becoming fervency on the importance of casting out the anchors—faith, hope, love, and prayer. the necessity of abiding in the ship in order to be saved, and the consolation to be found in the fact that not a hair of their heads should be hurt, but that they (the members of the church) should all reach the shore in safety. The preacher concluded by asking one of our aged preachers, whom he had invited into the pulpit out of respect to his gray hairs, to close the meeting with a few remarks. The old brother arose, and, placing his hands on the young theologian's head as if giving him a phrenological examination, proceeded in his plain, uneducated style substantially as follows:—

"My young brother. you've preached us a mighty purty discourse to-day, but I'm afeared you've made some awful big mistakes. You said that the ship meant the church. If that's so, we have n't got no church, now, for the ship was all smashed to peices and destroyed. You also said that the four anchors were faith, hope, love, and prayer. If that's so, we hain't got any faith, hope, love, and prayer in the church, as they have been cast out. And you said that Christians are the crew. If that's so, they are a mighty blood-thirsty set, for they wanted to kill Paul. You also told us that the island of Melita meant Heaven. Well, if that's true, Heaven must be a mighty snakey place, as one bit Paul as soon as he landed."

It is stated, as an historical fact, that the young preacher was never known to preach that "purty" discourse again, in all that region of country.—The Christian, Quincy, Ill.

Reaching the Heart.

A teacher, now in the First Presbyterian church in Elmira, says the Sunday School Times, had, years ago, the following interesting experience:—

A child came into her class for a Sabbath, whose father was a well-known infidel. He had carefully kept her from all religious reading and instruction, but had at length yielded to her request to go for once to the Sunday-school. The teacher resolved to make the most of the opportunity. and, laying aside the usual lesson, went over the life of Jesus. The child listened more eagerly than to a romance, and when, at the close, the teacher asked if people ought not love such a Savior as that, the little pupil answer, "Yes; they would if they knew it; and why do n't you tell everybody of it?"

Full of the narrative, which, from the moment of hearing it, seemed to have won her to an implicit faith, she went home to tell her father and friends of what she had heard. No audience could resist such a preacher. The father no longer objected to her attendance at Sunday-school, but when necessary carried her in his arms to religious services. Jesus was to her the nearest and dearest of friends, to whom she went with interest and anxiety, as if He was a dweller in the house,as once he was at Bethany. She and her mother are now members of the church.

"JESUS."

The most fascinating theme for a heart properly attuned, is the Savior. There is something in the morning light to suggest him, and something in the evening shadow to speak his praise. The flower breathes him, the star shines him, the cascade proclaims him, all the voices of nature chant him. Whatever is grand, bright and beautiful, if you only listen to it, will speak his praise. So now, when I come in summer time and pluck a flower, I think of him who is "The Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley." When I see in the fields a lamb, I say, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." When in the very hot weather I come under a projecting cliff, I say:

"Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee!"

Over the old-fashioned pulpits there was a sounding board. The voice of the minister rose to the sounding board and was then struck back again to the ears of the people. And so the ten thousand voices of earth rising up, find the heaven a sounding board which strikes back to the ear of all the nations the praises of Christ. The heavens tell hisg lory,and earth shows his handiwork. The Bible thrills with one great story of redemption. Upon a blasted and faded Paradise, it poured the light of a glorious restoration. It looked upon Abraham from the ram caught in the thicket. It spoke in the bleating of the herds driven down to Jerusalem for sacrifice. It put infinite pathos into the speech of uncouth fishermen. It lifted Paul into the third heaven, and it broke upon the ears of St. John with the brazen trumpets and the doxology of the elders, and the rushing wings of the seraphim.

Instead of waiting until you get sick and worn out before you speak the praise of Christ, while your heart is happiest, and your step is lightest, and your fortunes smile, and your pathway blossoms, and the overarching heavens drop upon you their benediction, speak the praises of Jesus.

The old Greek orators when they saw their audiences inattentive and slumbering, had one word with which they would rouse them up to the greatest enthusiasm. In the midst of their orations, they would stop and cry out, "Marathon!" and the people's enthusiasm would be unbounded. My hearers, though you may have been borne down with sin, and though troubles and trials, and temptation, may have come upon you, and you feel to-night hardly like looking up, methinks there is one grand, royal, imperial word that ought to arouse your souls to infinite rejoicing, and that word is "Jesus."—T. DeWitt Talmage.

A Noble Example.

The writer of this article once witnessed a personal and rather acrimonious assult made in the Senate Chamber by John J. Chittenden, of Kentucky, on Senator Clayton, of Delaware, and listened to the retort of the latter. The encounter of these two intellectual giants and former friends, was most painful to every one present. It spread an expression of sadness over every Senator in the Chamber, and, at the conclusion of Mr. Clayton's reply, the Senate adjourned. On the next morning, at the conclusion of the reading of the Journal, the illustrious Kentuckian arose at his desk and commenced to make a personal apology to Mr. Clayton for the injustice he had been led to believe, on reflection, he inflicted on the Senator from Delaware. At this point, Mr. Clayton sprang to his feet with the remark that he "must interrupt the Senator, and not permit him to proceed, for the manifestation of a disposition to apologize was ample satisfaction for any inadvertence," advanced and extended his hand to Mr. Chittenden. Every one was delighted with Mr. Chittenden for his frank disavowal in his calm moments of what he had unjustly uttered under excitement, and with Mr. Clayton for meeting him fully half way. Neither was lowered; both were elevated in the opinion of their peers, and this would have been the verdict of the country could the public have witnessed this incident on the part of these great statesmen.

And thus it will ever be. He who frankly confesses a fault wins a victory.—Washington Chronicle.

There are souls that are created for one another in the eternities, hearts that are predestined each to each, from the absolute necessities of their nature; and when this man and this woman come face to face, their hearts throb, and are one.

Giving and Receiving.

The Lord Jesus speaks from experience when he explains how pleasant it is to give. He is entitled to speak on that point with authority. He has had much to do with giving first and last. If there is sweetness in the act he must have enjoyed that pleasure to the full. He gave himself for us: this is a gift unspeakable. We have no line wherewith we may measure its greatness. It is as when a little child looks down into the blue heavens mirrored in a still lake; the child exclaims: "These skies are deep, deep!" But how deep he has no conception, far less an adequate word. Inconceivable to men and angels, infinite is the gift which our Redeemer bestowed when he offered himself to take sin away. The giver of himself knows what giving is, and is entitled to speak with authority on the amount of blessedness involved in the act.—Sel.

For the Companion.

The Moustache.

This appendage contaminated with filth certainly is anything but decency. It must be remembered, however, that the unsightliness is not caused by the moustache itself. It is altogether the fault of the owner and therefore we should criticise for indecorum, and not for the wearing of this natural addition to the face; otherwise we might with equal propriety criticise the beard, and hair of the head, and advise, for similar reasons, the shaving of these parts also.

I know men who are wearing the moustache, have for years, and they uphold the right to wear it with the same spirit, and for equally as good reasons, as others the hair on their head.

The moustache is of itself not unsightly, no more so than the beard; and only, like any other appendage of the body, becomes so by neglect. Well trained, orderly, and well developed, this natural attachment to the face is not only becoming and beautiful, but also useful and very good.

1. It is becoming, because it is part of the natural attire of the male.

2. It is beautiful, because it is becoming, and because none of God's work, though apparently insignificant, lacks appropriate beauty. Beauty in nature, is the outward sign of internal perfection.

3. It is useful, because, first, It hides from view the motion of the lips of the orator when engaged in pouring forth the burning words of his great speeches, thus aiding these words in becoming more forcible and dignified to the hearer, who cannot amuse himself in watching the movements of the lips of the speaker; second, It tends to keep the lips moist, more pliable, and more easy of mobility, &c., conditions indispensible to the public orator; third, It acts as a screen when drinking without cup or vessel, out of brook or pond, as is often the case during adventures and travels, thus saving one to a great extent from the danger of drinking water bugs, or vegetables, or other might-be injurious matter. There are still other uses of the moustache which I will not here name.

4. It is very good, because, first, God said so; second, Of its usefulness.

"It is very plain I know,
With never a speck of crimson,
For it was not made for show."—The Sparrow.

God is God of the natural as well as the supernatural, and we must leave his works for the purposes he made them, whether or not we know their uses. "And God saw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good." Thus God spake well of all, giving us the undeniable right to infer that he includes the moustache.

I know of no authority that the patriarchs, saints, prophets, or any other holy men ever used the razor for the purpose intimated by T. F. Tukesbury in his essay on the Moustache, C. F. C., page 519, present volume; nor do I know of any divine rebuke to the wearing of the moustache as under consideration.

The writer quotes: "Let all things be done decently and in order," 1 Cor. 14: 40. Are we to understand that this scripture means, cut off the moustache? If so, then will he please give us readers of the C. F. C. a more through explanation? I heartily unite with our friend in attempting to eradicate all corruption and disorder, whether in the heart, mouth, moustache, boots or frying-pan; but when it comes to criticizing any part of God's great work, whether the stars, sun, moon, earth, heaven itself, or the moustache, then I would say, better stop and think before letting one other thought escape the mind and jump through the mouth, or leap off the pen.

Our friend wishes to have us believe that the man who wears a moustache is an uncommon, human monster. If he is correct, then God made the cause of the monstrosity; and if according to James 1: 21, as he quotes, the moustache is filthy and a superfluity, then we will have no trouble in convincing our own minds that God did not understand things as well as he might have, and that the world had to wait nearly six thousand years on James and Tukesbury to reveal the great mistake in the creation, and that one certain way for us poor, mortal male creatures to be saved from becoming monsters, is, to keep the hair on our upper lip closely shaved.

He also says, "But the upper lip shingled with a cupola of moustache is the most disgusting." What God saw as very good Mr. T. seems to see as most disgusting. Who is the wiser, T. F. Tukesbury, or the Creator, our God? The half civilized Chinaman thinks, that a woman is no lady unless she has no feet; and our enthusiastic friend, T. F. Tukesbury, seems to think that no man is a gentleman unless he has no moustache. If the writer's views are correct, then, were not Adam and all his male descendants in a very alarming condition, until the razor was invented? And was it not a terrible mistake on the part of the Creator to make such a formidable appendage to the human face Divine, in his own image, and then create no razor to cut the terror off?

Not until T. F. Tukesbury, or some other means, convinces me of the formidability of the moustache, will I be willing to cut off my own moustache, worship the steel, and sing high praise to thee, Oh, glorious razor, thou blessed Redeemer!

J. P. Miller, M. D.
Philadelphia, Pa.

Advice to the Girls.

Girls talk and laugh about marriage as though it was a jubilee, a gladsome thing, a rose without a thorn. And so it is, if it is all right—if they go about it as rational beings instead of merry-making children. It is a serious thing to marry. It is a life business. Therefore never do it in haste; never run away and get married; never marry for wealth or standing; or fine person, or manners, but only for character, for worth, for the qualities of mind and heart which make an honorable man. Take time; think long and well before you accept any proposal; consult your parents, then some judicious friend, then your own judgment. Learn all that it is possible for you to learn of your proposed husband; when all doubts have been removed, and not till then, accept him.

Envy is one of the most despicable passions. There is scarcely a crime to which it will not lead its victims. It was envy that robbed the poor Naboth of his vineyard, and added murder to the theft. It was envy that led the guilty Absalom to desire the throne of his father David. It destroys all that is best and noblest in character. So subtle is it in its workings that we learn on the highest testimony that "envy is rottenness of the bones"; it eats out all honor and manliness; it gives sleepless nights, restless days. Moreover, envy is utterly useless; it helps nobody, it effects no alteration, it wins no goal. As we read in Job, "It slayeth the silly one;" and all sensible people must feel that there is marvelous silliness in envy.

Familiar Quotations.

Quoted odes, and jewels five words long.
That, on the stretched forefinger of all
Time, Sparkle forever.

Man's love is of man's life a thing a part,
'Tis woman's whole existence.

The leaves of memory seemed to make
A mournful rustling in the dark.

There is no death! what seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call death.

And thus he bore without abuse
The grand old name of gentleman,
Defamed by every charlatan,
And soiled with all ignoble use.

Howe'er it be, it seems to me,
'Tis only noble to be good,
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood.

The devil hath not, in all quivering choice,
An arrow for the heart like a sweet voice.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows, and in miseries.

But pleasures are like poppies spread,
You sieze the flower, its bloom is shed;
Or, like the snow-flake in the river,
A moment white then gone forever.

To die is landing on some silent shore,
Where billows never break, nor tempests roar;
Ere well we feel the friendly stroke
'tis o'er.

Whoe'er amid the sons
Of reason, valor, liberty and virtue
Displays distinguished merit, is a noble
Of nature's own creating.

There is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there;
There is no fireside, howso'er defended,
But has one vacant chair.

The Better Part.

The apostle says: "Covet earnestly the best gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy. In Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female, but all are one."

Shall we covet the gift of another? We think not. But the gift of the Spirit which "searcheth all things, yea, even the deep things of God." The Lord said through the prophet Joel, "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." Brethren, where are your daughters who prophesy! Does the covering now take the place of prophecy and prayer in the congregation? If men feel dishonored when they hear women preach without what is termed a proper covering on their heads, why should not Christ feel dishonored by their being subjected to silence, and a white fabric on the head substituted in place of prayer to God and prophecy in his name? Nay, my sisters, be not satisfied with that alone, but get the testimony of Jesus. John says, "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." What will it profit us to have worn the covering, when we are called to appear before the Judge of the quick and the dead, if we are not of those who have been quickened and made alive by the Spirit of promise, which was poured out upon the Jews on the day of Penteeost, and upon the Gentiles in the house of Cornelius? The evidence of which was, that they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. and I ask, where is the evidence of the Spirit without it?

The article of brother A. P. in present volume, page 424, is before me, with which I agree that the covering spoken of by Paul, was a token of something higher in its nature, than is generally urged by the brethren. I have searched the books, both Old and New, and find nothing like a command to a Gentile woman to use the one without the other. I have no objection to wearing the style adopted by the sisters, for I was one who helped to adopt it, years ago; but I do feel that there is danger in us seeking to be comely, and the honor of men more than the glory of God. In love of the truth, by your humble sister,

SARAH E. KEPNER.

The Family Bible.

This book is all that's left me now:
Tears will unbidden start,
With flattening lip and throbbing brow,
I press thee to my heart;
For many generations past,
Here is our family tree;
My mother's hand this Bible clasped,
She dying, gave it me.

Ah! well do I remember those,
Whose names these records bear,
Who'round the hearthstone used to close
After the evening prayer,
And speak of what these pages said,
In tones my heart would thrill:
Tho' they are with the silent dead,
Here are they living still.

My father read this holy book,
To brothers, sisters dear:
How calm was my poor mother's look,
Who loved God's word to hear;
Her angel face, I see it yet:
What thronging memories come,
Again that little group is met,
Within the halls of home,
Thou truest friend man ever knew,
Thy constancy I've tried;
When all were false I found thee true,
My counsellor and guide:
The mines of earth no treasure give,
That could this volume buy!
In teaching me the way to live,
It taught me how to die.

American Tract Society.

Selected by P. ZOOK.

Finery for Babies.

K. F. T.—When will American mothers show their good sense and dress their children plainly? An underskirt is just as useful entirely plain, as with innumerable tucks and ruffles; aprons soil just as quickly with all the stitching and ornamenting, as if without it.

We should avoid all this useless work. A good sewing machine used to perform the sewing of plain garments is a valuable servant. My sewing is no severe master for me, though there are six of us to be clothed. My children never seem to feel the need of tucks and ruffles, and as I join them for a ramble, hunting Spring flowers, I am not constantly fretted about their clothes, for they are of good, substantial material, not easily torn, and so plainly made that if soiled they are very easily washed and ironed. People say to me, what a healthy, rose-looking family you have, and surely we have. I think very few people ever felt seriously distressed at the plain, simple dress of my children. I was once very much distressed by one of the numerous children of a hard working mechanic coming to my door one cold, rainy day, dressed in ruffled dress and apron, with shoes unfit for any child to wear, and asking for a pattern for an infant's tucked dress. I told the child to tell its mother I never had such an article, and hoped my good sense would never allow such a display. Very pretty they are, but there are so many things to be done for the sweetest and most helpless of all creatures, that I should hardly feel justified in taking the time to make and iron such a garment.

Mothers, try the plan of plain garments and see if the little ones are not just as comfortable, and if you do not find your labors very much lessened by it.

Above all things try to find time for a little self-culture, that you may be the companions and teachers of the tender years of your children.

MRS. J. B. LYMAN.

Where Is The West.

"Ask, where's the north? At York
'tis on the Tweed;
In Scotland, on the Orcades, and there,
'Tis Greenland. Zembla or the Lord knows where."

The West is ever receding, like the North. It is not very long ago since Massachusetts called a railroad, which begins forty-four miles west of Boston, the Western. After the Revolution, the first West was New York, beyond the Dutch on the Mohawk. Then it was the "Western Reserve," about Cleveland. Next it was Indiana, then Illinois. When the Erie Canal opened in 1825, it was Michigan, next Wisconsin and Iowa. Slavery agitations revealed another West in Missouri, Texas and Kansas. But all these wests, if rolled into one, are smaller than the newest West which we owe to the trans continental railroad. This West stretches from torrid to frigid zones, having California in its ocean centre, and Nebraska as its counterpart on the Missouri. The route of the Union Pacific road was pre-determined by population having long gravitated irresistibly to that latitude, and that that route was wisely chosen is further shown by the Nebraska population having doubled in the last four years, while that along its Burlington branch has increased still faster.

But the meaning of the West has always been one, whatever the changes in its locality. It always meant cheap land. Therefore it now begins at the Missouri, because east of that river no land in desirable climates remains open to homesteader or pre-emptor.

Nebraska is then the threshold of the West. There Uncle Sam is still rich enough to give us all a farm, and the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad offers its grant on terms which many settlers prefer to the free grants of the United States.

PROF. J. D. BUTLER.

They Say.

They say—Ah! well, suppose they do,
But can they prove the story true?
Suspicion may arise from nought
But malice, envy, want of thought;
Why count yourself among the "they,"
Who whisper what they dare not say?

They say—But why the tale rehearse,
And help to make the matter worse?
No good can possibly accrue
From telling what may be untrue;
And is it not a nobler plan
To speak of all the best you can?

They say—Well, if it should be so,
Why need you tell the tale of woe?
Will it the bitter wrong redress,
Or make one pang of sorrow less?
Will it the erring one restore,
Henceforth to "go and sin no more?"

They say—O pause, and look within,
See how thine heart inclines to sin;
Watch, lest in dark temptation's hour
Thou, too, shouldst sink beneath its power,
Pity the frail, weep o'er their Fall.
But speak of good or not at all.

To The Reader.

Reader, I will endeavor in these few thoughts to impress upon your mind the great necessity of obeying God in all his precepts, and to throw some light upon the order to be observed in the house of God. What reception it may meet with is unknown to me. Had it not been for so much deviation from the true observance of Christ's precepts, I do not suppose that I should have thought it necessary to do so. But how can I well forbear, believing, as I do, that we cannot be too particular in observing every command of the New Testament, and at the same time hearing and seeing so much in opposition to the precepts of our Lord Jesus Christ. Our dear Redeemer declared, and said in his sermon delivered upon the mountain, as you read in Matth. 7: 21--23, "Not every one that says unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name and in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name have done many wonderful works, and then will I profess unto them I never knew you, depart from me ye workers of iniquity." Now from the above we may truly infer that notwithstanding our calling upon the name of the Lord, which is our reasonable service, if we do not observe the will of the Lord we shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven; and that many persons, yea preachers, may and will live and die in a state of deception, being under the impression that they are the chosen ones of the Lord, but in the final day of reckoning it will be revealed to men and angels that they were in a state of delusion. Oh! the danger, the great danger, of being deceived! The apostle tells us, that Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light; therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works. 2 Cor. 11: 14, 15. "And Christ declared, that there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. These few meditations which presented themselves to my mind, I now submit to the readers of the COMPANION, hoping that we may be profited by them.

P. LANDIS.

Dale City, Pa.

Secret Societies.

On the 29th of November, 1870, at a public meeting held in Clifford, Susquehanna Co., Pa., an organization was effected styled The Association of North Eastern Pennsylvania opposed to secret societies, whose object is to disseminate truth in regard to secret societies, and to endeavor by all lawful means to banish them from the church of Christ, which they disparage and supplant, and from civil society, which they demoralize and corrupt.

The officers of this society for the ensuing year are, a president, ten vice-presidents, treasurer, corresponding and recording secretaries.

At the first regular quarterly meeting held in Bailey Hollow, Luzerne Co., Pa., on the 30th of May, 1871, an active and zealous minister of the gospel, now laboring as missionary in Northeastern, Pa., gave us two thrilling lectures on the institution of Free Masonary. He is a very impressive speaker, and addressed an attentive and respectable audience and not a "few old fogies" as masons would have us believe. He gave us, to use his own words, "not what he had heard or read, but what he knew of freemasonry," narrating the ruffianly treatment he had received from a mason mob at Buenavista, N. Y., and the vindictive threats of other masons truly appalling. One particular we mention. A professed minister of the gospel (a Methodist), said to him, "You perjured wretch, I would be one of three to take your heart out and hold it up before your eyes so quick that you could see it quiver." Masonry he found to be a gigantic deception and fraud, opposed alike to Christianity and all good government, causing its adherents to "always hail, ever conceal, and never reveal" its profane mysteries under the most horrid and barbarous oaths and death penalties. The committee on resolutions reported the following as a declaration of the sentiments of the association, which was unanimously adopted, and a desire expressed for its general publication.

S. E. Miller, President.
James L. Andrus, Rec. Secretary.

In this first communication to our fellow-citizens and fellow-Christians this Association candidly express their opinion:

1. That, in view of the multiplicity, the pretensions, and the vast expenditure of time and of money, of the swarms of affiliated, oath-bound, secret societies in our common country, their true nature and their tendency are matters of universal and of serious concern.

2. That as no man's life-time, and few men's fortunes would enable them to enter all the lodges and attain all the degrees, each of which claims increasing importance, it is obviously impossible to test by practical experiment. True wisdom, however, dictates and facts demonstrate that their character and bearing may be learned by other means.

3. That, among those means, we recommend the perusal of some of the following Journals, which are more or less devoted to the independent investigation of such societies: Christian Cynosure, of Chicago; American Baptist, of New York city; American Wesleyan, of Syracuse, N. Y.; and Religious Telescope, of Dayton, Ohio.

4. That, for a few dollars, the following books give the information which would require ten times as much money and time to procure through lodges—information, as we believe, sufficiently complete for all useful purposes, and correct as far as it goes: David Bernard's Light on Masonry and Odd-Fellowship, "J. G. Stearns's Inquiry into the Nature and tendency of Speculative Free Masonry," C. G. Finney's Letters on Masonry, John Levington's Masonic Conspiracy, Sam. D. Green's Broken Seal.

5. That there is no good thing, in moral or in civil affairs, which, as a system, should be kept from public view, or hid in mysteries only penetrated by money and degrading forms.

6. That whatever of good may be gained through the medium of secret societies, can be better and easier attained by open, direct, manly, Christian efforts for those ends, and at a tithe of the expenditure of time and money incurred by the midnight conclaves.

7. That as the divine Founder of the Christian religion taught nothing in secret, but made all his instructions and his bounties free to all of Adam's race who would accept them, it becomes his followers, and especially those who stand up as his embassadors, to imitate his example in that respect.

8. That as secret societies naturally and almost invariably breed dissensions and divisions in churches, we recommend to the latter the expediency of making it, hereafter, a condition, on receiving new members, that they have no connection with such societies; and affectionately advising those, now members, who have been entangled in them, to dissolve their relation to those rivals of Christian supremacy and progress.

9. That the sum of Bible truth is contained in these two declarations: "There is no other name given under heaven among men whereby we can be saved but the name of Jesus Christ;" and "Whosoever believeth in him need not perish, but have everlasting life." But the precious name of Jesus can not be breathed in many of the lodges, and where it is allowed it is in degrading and profane associations.

10. That the scores of vain, disgusting, and impious titles, bestowed by secret societies, are alike opposed to the simplicity of the gospel and to that clause of the constitution of our republic which prohibits the granting of any title of nobility.

11. That in view of the undue proportion of members of secret societies in official stations, it is obvious that those societies, notwithstanding their disclaimers, are made stepping stones to power; and to the same source we attribute the fact that too many unprincipled and improper men contrive to obtain honor and trust.

12. The system of presenting candidates for office, whereby delegates are interposed to take from the people the selection, are modes to enable the few to rule the many; and that, as a correction of this evil, we suggest that candidates for offices generally be nominated, as they are elected, by a direct vote of those concerned.

13. That the intrusion of the peculiarities of secretism into religious and literary operations and observances, is obnoxious to the large and increasing class of citizens and Christians who have no allegiance to or sympathy with those societies.

14. That in the language of General Washington to Governor Trumbell, freemasonry, the mother of secret fraternities, is "for the most part, mere child's play" at best, unworthy of the dignity of man. In its best days Washington had been made a mason, yet, as early as 1781, "did not wish to be addressed" as a "private brother," and never attended a lodge more than once or twice within the last thirty years of his life.

15. That we especially advise the young not to be drawn into dangerous and injurious alliances by any of the many orders which try to conceal their workings in the dark, only revealing so much of their schemes as they think may entrap the superficial and unwary.—Sel.

On the Death of a Sister.

The following poetry was composed on the death of a very amiable, active, and exemplary member, in one of the churches in Frederick city, Md., and was sung at her funeral. It was published in some of the Frederick papers. It was just the length and width of the Brethren's hymn book, so I cut it out and pasted it on the inside cover of one of my hymn books. And as there are some of our young sisters dying, at whose funeral it would be highly appropriate to sing, I send it to the C. F. C., and if the editor will insert it in type so as to occupy a column no longer than the leaves in our hymn book, brethren and sisters wishing to paste it in can do so.

D. P. SAYLER.

"Sweet daughter of the church, farewell;
To Jesus thou hast gone;
The battle thou hast bravely fought,
The victory thou hast won;
This earth is not for thee, fair child;
Thy home must be in heaven!
To thee the Savior whom thou lov'st
A glorious crown has given!

The church in love weeps over thee;
The parents grieve to part;
Affection bids us all to weep,
Though not with hopeless heart.
We weep for joy that thou hast gained
That bliss beyond the grave!
And now with Jesus thou dost rest
Who died thy soul to save!

Father, grieve not! thy child has gone
To rest in peace above!
She bids thee follow in her steps
To that sweet home of love!
Mother, wipe off the falling tear!
Though deep may be the wound,
Rejoice that thou hast given a saint
To be in glory crowned!

O father, mother, follow her,
That sainted child of heaven!
Rejoice that she a rest has gained
Which earth could ne'er have given.
Ye daughters of the church, look up!
Why stand ye weeping so!
Go forth to battle as she did,
And gain the victory too!

Sweet sister, daughter of the church,
And child of heaven's King,
Though hard it seems to part with thee,
With joy thy praise we sing!
With angels may we all rejoice
That one more saint is blest,
Snatched from the toils and cares of earth,
In Jesus' arms to rest!

Rest, then, sweet maiden, child of heaven,
Where sorrows are unknown!
May we all reap the precious seed
Which thou on earth hast sown,
Farewell, pure daughter of the church,
'Till we shall meet above,
And with the Lamb once slain shall rest
In an undying love!

Constables and Illegal Liquor Selling.

The following we clip from the Kittanning Union Free Press, as we think it worthy of more extended circulation.

Judge Logan, of this Judical District, recently made the following decision regarding the duties of constables in making arrests for the violation of the liquor law:

Your duty is to return, as violations of the license, all sales of vinous, spiritous, malt or brewed liquors, or any admixture thereof, by unlicensed persons, within your knowledge, unless such sale be by the manufacturer or importer, in the cask or barrel, or by druggists, for medicinal or manufacturing purposes. Druggists, however, selling such liquors as a beverage or for purposes other than medicinal or manufacturing, would be violating the law and would be proper subjects of return.

It is your duty to the common law, to make return of sale of intoxicating liquors on Sundays, to minors, and to persons of intemperate habits, and of these we do not now so particularly speak.

That you have knowledge is of course essential to making a return for selling liquor without license, as well as in all other subjects of return. It would, of course, be a gross outrage for a constable to return a particular person as having committed a particular offense, if the officer knew nothing about such offending. I will be excused for referring particularly to this matter of requisite knowledge in the present connection, as from the inquiries made this seems to be your main difficulty. To describe it minutely may not be easy, but a few general rules can be stated which may relieve you from embarrassment in the ordinary discharge of your duty.

If you have such information as would convince your judgment and influence your action in any other every day business transaction, of concern to yourself, then you have requisite knowledge on which to found your return. If you have information from a respectable source, of a character not sufficient to satisfy your judgment, but such as would, in a matter of your own personal interest, put you to inquiry, then it is your duty to make inquiry as to the alleged violation of law, and pursue it with reasonable ways and diligence until you have determined its truth or detected its falsity. It is not necessary that you be absolutely convinced; it is enough if you are reasonably satisfied, one way or other, as to the facts alleged.

It is not essential that you have knowledge from actual sight of passing out the drink and receiving the money, to justify a return for selling liquor. If you have knowledge of such facts and circumstances as in themselves reasonably and satisfactorily point to the violation of the law, this, itself, is knowledge of the violation of the law. Do you know of persons going into places of common resort and coming out intoxicated, or in such condition as results immediately from the use of intoxicating drinks, and this repeatedly? Have you knowledge from credible citizens that liquors are being bought and sold in violation of law by any particular person? Does the common voice of the community assert that liquors are being unlawfully sold at any described place in your borough or township? And do the circumstances within reach of your observation corroborate such declaration or such rumor? If so, gentlemen, and your judgment is satisfied that the law is being violated, you have such knowledge as will justify a return; or, if your judgment hesitates, you are possessed of such information as should provoke you to inquiry, which should be pursued, not by artifice, but by reasonable and usual ways and means, until you are sufficiently advised to determine your action.

Passing Away.

How beautiful the calm, blue sky,
With all its wealth of fleecy clouds,
Enlivened with the sun's bright ray,
They seem to me like angels in their snow white robes!
But soon, ah soon they pass, all pass away.

How beautiful the bright, green earth,
With myriads of sweet-scented flowers;
Enjoy their fragrance while you may,
For lo! they wither, though we prize them highly now,
And like all pleasures here they pass away.

How beautiful the little ones,
Who cheer our pathway with their love;
Think you their lovely forms decay,
Their innocence, their sweet, angelic smiles of joy?
Oh yes! too soon, we know they pass away.

Oh earthly joys! oh earthly hopes,
With all their flat'ring promises,
And now, oh with what sore dismay—
We recollect our hearts were bound as with a chain—
So soon to break, dissolve, and pass away.

Despair! will all things perish then?
Is there no hope for broken hearts?
Will naught our tears, our prayers repay?
O weary soul! trust now in Christ; though earth shall pass,
Yet His dear words shall never pass away.

CARRIE HOLSINGER.

Carlton, Nebraska.

Guilty Concerning Our Sister.

What makes it so difficult for a woman, after her first lapse from virtue, to retrace her steps? Clearly that savage, unjust and unchristianlike public opinion which excuses a whole life of dissipation in one sex, and turns contemptuously away from the other, leaving her alone with the unpardonable and the irreparable. But in thus judging moral delinquencies we use these "partial balances" and "false weights" which are an "abomination to the Lord." Why are his sins "the venial errors of youth," and hers "innate depravity' and 'hopeless degradation?"

Ah! but there will be a fairer reckoning yet, and before the bar of heaven men and women will stand on the same moral plane.

Evidently, then, before much good can be done for the fallen glory of womanhood, there must be a complete and general resume of the judgment which society has passed upon it. But toward this change of opinion every one may contribute their mite. The dictum of the press will do much, and pure, noble women, with hearts over which the spirit of love broods, can do vastly more.

The purer, the higher in social rank, the more refined and delicate, the more are they the anointed saviors of their sex. Nor need they fear that the whitest fame will contract any soil. Do not God's sunbeams visit the filthiest alleys and the most loathsome dwellings? And are they defiled or injured by their gracious mercy? Is it not well known that women of the Romish and English Churches habitually go amongst the most depraved as missionaries and nurses, and yet are innocent.

But excellent as this way is, it is not all that is wanted. When Christ cured the leper he put his hand upon him. We must come to them as mother to daughter, as sister to sister, as friend to friend. We must trust them, and trust them largely, in order to make them worthy of our trust.

There is scarcely a wife in any large city who does not have it in her power to help some fallen sister up and on again. But they won't do it. Chemists say there is iron in the blood, and the way one woman treats another is abundant proof of it.

It is the duty of all who have the means and position to do it, to search out individual cases and try and redeem them. The recompense is a very great one. "He which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins."

Therefore, if you see a fallen sister on the way of life, don't "pass by on the other side," for, alas! this life so wasted already is all she has to front Eternity with.—Selected

The more we become acquainted with Jesus and with ourselves, the more we seek to be like that blessed One.

For the COMPANION.

God's Love to Man.

Upright and pure our parents were,
When first from God they came,
No toil, no fear, no pain they knew,
No grief, no sin, nor shame.

When Eden's Garden first received,
This happy pair in love,
With peace and joy, and perfect bliss,
Prepared for heav'n above,

This happy state they might enjoy,
Had man his God obeyed,
Had not the enemy of souls,
The plan of ruin laid.

He in a serpent's form appeared,
And tempted mother Eve,
To eat of that forbidden tree,
And knowledge she 'd receive.

Behold the fear attach'd to sin,
To seek a hiding place,
They hear the voice of God within,
Afraid to show their face.

The weight of sin, they must have felt,
And knew not what to do,
Death was the penalty to pay,
To disobedience due.

They disobeyed God's just command,
God drove them from within
And placed an angel at the gate,
That none should enter in.

Transgression by our parents, brought Death unto man below,
And the displeasure of his God,
And fill'd his days with woe.

In this condition God look'd down,
And view'd his fallen state,
He pitied him, he sent relief,
And opened wide the gate.

O what a love the Father had,
When his dear SON he gave,
To suffer death upon the cross,
That man through him might live.

Then let us look to Calvary
Where our dear Savior bled,
See the great drops of blood that stood,
Upon his sacred head.

O what a dreadful thing is sin,
What sorrow it has cost,
And if continued on therein,
The soul is surely lost.

How careful then we all should be,
Who have professed his name,
To crucify him not again
Nor put to open shame.

Jesus, the sinner's only friend,
This debt of love did pay;
He came to do his Father's will,
And open up the way.

Now mercy's gate stands open wide,
And sinners bade "Come in,
Repent, believe, and be baptized,
And wash away your sin.

"The way is plain, the path is straight,
But you, your cross must bear,
If you would wish to enter in,
And have a CROWN TO WEAR."

O sinner, why will you delay,
The gospel truths you've heard,
God would not have you die unsaved,
Wont you believe his word?

You'll not be sorry when in death,
To have a faithful friend,
One that has promised to be with
You, even to the end,

Then at the resurrection morn,
Your body risen be,
To dwell with all the glorified,
In an eternity.

ISAIAH G. HARLEY.

Philadelphia, Pa.

For the COMPANION.

Baptism—A Review. No. 1.

I had thought that I would not impose upon the readers of the C. F. C. any more, by sending in my weak essays; but after reading a little work on baptism, written by R. L. Brooks, of Upshur Co., W. Va., I do not feel like withholding my pen, and trust, that while Brooks' little work is received, and sanctioned by many, my weakness may convince one.

And after reading his work with the scrutinizing principles of the gospel, we feel abashed to see humanity assume the authority to abrogate the divine behests of heaven.

It will not be my design here to reiterate much of his work; but briefly notice a few of his devious dogmas, and try to show that immersion is baptism.

Third, and lastly, to briefly notice trine immersion as the only legitimate mode of administering the ordinance.

The gentleman seems to labor excessively hard to impress the minds of his readers, that sprinkling and pouring are the only true modes, while the apostle tells us there is but one mode. He also strongly vindicates the devious act of sprinkling infants. And after his excessive labors are over, in his synopsis he makes the broad assertion that water cannot constitute Christian baptism. I would ask, in what element is it then performed, if not in water, and why is it that he does maintain in his work throughout, for the element of water with which he performed the administration of his modes of sprinkling, and pouring? His argument is very inconsistent, and his practice more so. Because he will vindicate the practice of sprinkling, and pouring, and repudiate the administration of immersion, yet if his applicant will insist upon it; he will go with him down into the water, and baptize him as he calls it, and both come up out of the water. I am taught by the apostle to the Romans; "For whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Oh! inconsistent man; why wilt thou practice immersion, and yet preach against it? On the third and fourth page of his work, he speaks of the baptism of the eunuch by Philip: "And they went down, both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water," Acts 8: 38. "If going down into the water, Philip and the eunuch both went under, and while under, Philip pronounced the words of consecration. If so I guess the eunuch never heard them." He farther states that "in the propheey the eunuch was reading, just six verses before the words given, it is said, 'So shall he sprinkle many nations.' Isa: 52: 15. It would be strange to hear a man preach immersion from a text that reads sprinkle."

I am well aware of the fact that the passage referred to, and a similar passage in Ezekiel 36: 25, are strong holds which our antagonists use to prove sprinkling as a baptism: but there is no sane mind, who will read with care and attention, the two passages referred to, but can see, that each prophet has direct reference to the Savior of the world. The prophet Isaiah records it, as though the Father was speaking. See 52: 13, 14, 15. "Behold my servant shall deal prudently, he shall be exalted, and exalted and be very high. As many were astonished at thee; his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men: so shall he sprinkle many nations: the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard, shall they consider." And the prophet Ezekiel records it as though he himself was speaking, for he says: "Then I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean, from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you."

It is clearly seen by any considerate mind, that the two passages referred to, have no allusion to baptism; but is a something which is to be performed in due time by the great Head of the church. It is so plain that it demands no comment.

We have neither time nor space to examine all his frivolous arguments; but will briefly notice some of his most prominent ones. Hope that our readers will bear with us in quoting some of his language from the apostle to the Galatians 3: 27 as he gives it: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." After quoting the above, he further says: "If water baptism does all this, no wonder the founder of the Dunker church, nullified marriage."

We are taught that the God of heaven was to set up a kingdom, that should never be destroyed. We are also taught by the Savior that upon this rock, will I build my church, and the gates of hell should not prevail against it. We understand from the Savior's language to Nicodemus: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." There is no considerate mind: but what can understand that the term kingdom, implies three grand particulars: first a king; second, a law; and third, subjects. And we believe that the church of Christ, which he came to set up, and establish, which begun at Jerusalem, and was to be preached to all nations, and which is preached to this day, is the kingdom to which he had reference when talking to Nicodemus, and if so we believe that he left visible and tangible marks by which it could be designated from all other kingdoms. Then if the Dunkers, as R. L. Brooks calls them, are obedient subjects to those visible or tangible marks, which were left for them to observe, Christ must be the founder, which we acknowledge and preach. And would to God that the Rev. Brooks would teach the nations, and practice himself the institutions of the kingdom which Christ instructed his apostles to teach all nations to observe. Does it not look as though the Rev. Brooks was speaking reproachfully of our King, when he accuses him of nullifying marriage? for we find in John's record of the gospel that he, (Christ) and his mother were invited to a wedding in Cana of Gallilee, and he converted water into wine for their comfort, and a manifestation of his power. We verily believe that marriage is of divine authority, and is sanctioned by the King of kings and Lord of lords.

We now pass to the seventh page, where he says: "Summing up the whole matter, we find in the book that Moses, Solomon, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Joel, Zachariah, Peter and Paul, all preached pouring and sprinkling." And farther says, that "the friends of immersion have virtually acknowledged that they cannot sustain the doctrine by the old standard Bible, and set about making one that will prove it." We would remark just here, that those good men, of whom the writer speaks, all did preach obedience; but not one of them preached sprinkling or pouring, as a baptism.

This sprinkling and pouring, of which the prophets and apostles speak, is evidently a something which the God of heaven is to perform himself in due time. And the baptism of water, which we will try to investigate is a something to be literally performed by mortal man.

He further says, that "some hold that none should be baptized but believers," to which I readily concede; for I believe it a sinful act to baptize an unbeliever, because we are taught that they that gladly received his words were baptized, both men and women, and not one passage have we to instruct us that infants are to be baptized, or that they were baptized in a primtive day.

And I do here maintain that the Son of God, visited this mundane system, for the purpose of removing the original sin, and to bring his Father's will for the observance of man, and to be the great sacrificial offering to appease the wrath of a sin-avenging God. I maintain that infants are all in the kingdom (church) until they arrive to the years of accountability, and then it is they leave the kingdom (church) by disobedience, and there is no other way of re-entering the kingdom, save strict and due obedience to the word of the Almighty God.

I believe that it is admitted by all, that baptism is the initiatory rite into the church, which I believe it is, and if so, how inconsistent to initiate infants into a something to which they already belong.

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The Savior farther says: "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

I will now proceed to examine immersion as promised in the onset, by looking for a few moments, at the language of the Son of God, to a Pharisee, a ruler of the Jews, named Nicodemus.

"Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." The language before us now, is plain and explicit, and has emanated from the fountain head,—from the lips of the God of heaven. There is no language that ever issued from the lips of God or man, that can be more plain, than the language before us. In the name of reasons, what does the word born, imply, or what does it signify? What is the definition of the term? Well I understand it to mean, emerge from, and out of, into a new state of being. It is an evident fact that nothing can emerge from and out of, without first being submerged. Submerge implies go into, and emerge come out of. And the term born itself conveys the idea to the mind at once, that the thing or person spoken of as being born, was first concealed, hid from sight, buried or immersed, before it could be born. It is impossible for anything to be born, without first being submerged from sight, concealed from the eyes of the world, buried or hid from view, and to be born is to emerge, come forth from its place of concealment, into a new state of existence. "Except a man be born of water," says the Savior. This fashion of sprinkling and pouring water as a baptism, which men have got into, is far from filling the language under consideration, as the material sun is from this mundane system. And should this come before the eyes of any of my competitors who repudiate the ordinance of Christian baptism, I trust that they may weigh the matter correctly, ponder it deeply, meditate solemnly, and consult God, for we have his word, which is our counsel.

(To be continued.)

A. STAUNAKER.

Selected by S. W. WITT.

The Blessed Story.

My children have you ever heard
That sweet and blessed story,
Recorded in the sacred Word,
About the Lord of glory;

Who left his home in realms above,
Was cradled in a manger;
And seeking sinners in his love,
Wandered a weary stranger?

They say his words are full of grace,
All human speech excelling;
That those who meekly sought his face,
Found peace beyond all telling:

That he forgave the guilt and sin
Of those who came confessing,
And that the poor and sad could win
His smile, and share his blessing.

For his own name and mercy's sake
He healed the broken-hearted;
And bade the mourning souls partake
The favors he imparted;

Till parents to his presence came,
With children round him pressing,
Attracted by his wondrous fame,
And seeking for his blessing.

He lived a life of toil and care,
A life of sad sojourning;
A life of weeping and of prayer,
Of labor, and of yearning;

He died upon the cursed tree,
To save a sinful nation;
He died to win for you and me
A full and free salvation!

Rural Village, Pa.

Look on death as a sunken fence, and look over and beyond it to the other side.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Oct. 14, 1873.

Our Trip to Armstrong County,—The Discussion.

On Friday morning, Sept. 26th, we left our home, to make a trip to Armstrong Co., Pa., to take part in the discussion of several questions, relating to our faith and practice. We had a pleasant trip, and arrived safely at our destination on Saturday evening; and found our parents, kindred, and old friends and neighbors in usual health, with a few exceptions.

Sunday, the 28th, was appointed to meet to finally arrange the propositions for discussion; and to talk over points of agreement and disagreement, so as to gain time, and not annoy the people with unnecessary talk. The day passed by, but our friend did not make his appearance.

Monday, the 29th, at 10 o'clock A. M., was the hour fixed for the discussion to begin. At the appointed hour, there was a fair congregation present; but as our friend had not yet come, there was a general feeling of disappointment, and some dissatisfaction. We waited half an hour, and then began to counsel with his chosen assistant moderator, as to what course to pursue; but before we had concluded, our friend made his appearance. This was some relief; but as our propositions were not in proper shape, we could not proceed. We called on our friend to offer his apology and postpone the discussion till 2 o'clock P. M. An apology was offered, and the postponement made.

Next we repaired to the house of friend Henry Sowers, had a talk about the business before us, dined, and then we came to terms, while our friendly moderators, (brother J. P. Hetric and Elder Isaiah Shoemaker,) drew up rules for our observance during the debate.

We agreed to discuss the following three propositions:

1. Christ did not eat the legal, or Jewish passover with his disciples on the night of his betrayal. Beer affirms.

2. The bread and wine, to be observed by the disciples of Christ, in remembrance of him, constitute the Lord's supper. Adams affirms.

3. The Lord's Supper, to be observed by the disciples of Christ, is a full evening meal. Beer affirms.

It will be seen, by examination, that the first proposition is negatively stated. This we did not regard as being quite fair, especially as our opponent had given the challenge; but as he was neither willing to acknowledge his error nor to affirm that Christ did eat the legal passover in that night, we expressed a willingness to affirm the negative.

At the hour appointed we were at our places. The congregation was not very large, but all seemed to be interested. Our assistant moderators then selected J. L. Stiffey, a young minister of the M. E. body, to be their foreman, who served acceptably during the entire discussion.

It was agreed to have three sessions per day, forenoon, afternoon, and evening, each session to be two hours in length: the speeches were limited to thirty minutes each.

The discussion of the first proposition was prolonged till the close of the afternoon session on Tuesday, which session was made three hours, instead of two, thus giving nine speeches to each.

In the evening we entered upon the second proposition, and, according to our understanding, exhausted it; but as our opponent asked for the first hour of the morning session to be given to this question, we consented. We however assured him that he could do no better in the morning, and we could do no worse.

On Wednesday morning the question was resumed, but it ended as we had predicted—nothing new was offered to support the proposition. One hour was then devoted to the third proposition.

The afternoon session was again prolonged, in order to bring the discussion to a close. The general attendance was not very large, but a good interest was manifested, and, we think, good feelings (with but a slight exception) prevailed. As to the merits of the discussion it does not become us to speak; but this we say: it was quite satisfactory to ourself, and we closed with unshaken and increased confidence in the truthfulness of our positions. We hope to give our readers a notice of the discussion by some of those in attendance. May the Lord bless our weak efforts to the glory of his name, is our prayer.

Thursday, Oct. 2nd, was spent in visiting and in attending to some business.

On Friday morning brother J. B. Wampler took us to Kittanning, on our way home. We left Kittanning at 3:15 P. M., but about five miles south we were detained, in consequence of a conflagration in the morning, by which eight oil cars, and part of the railroad track, were destroyed. Through this detention we failed to make the connection at Pittsburgh. We lodged at the St. James Hotel. Next morning we left Pittsburgh at 8 A. M., and arrived at Dale City at 12:32 P. M. Found all in usual health. Thanks to the Lord for his guidance and protection; and to our brethren and friends for their kindness.

J. W. B.

The Editor's Western Trip.

On the 8th inst., at five o'clock a. m., the editor of the COMPANION, accompanied by his wife, left Dale City to make their Western tour. We hope they may have a pleasant and prosperous journey; and be permitted in safety to return.

In No. 40, under the head of "Our Western Trip," brother Holsinger says: "Mail matter will reach us by being addressed to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in care of Daniel Holsinger, up to the last of October." This we conceive to be a mistake, as Daniel Holsinger's address is not Cedar Rapids, but MARION, LINN Co., Iowa. Those wishing to write in care of brother Daniel Holsinger, will please note this fact. However, Cedar Rapids is in the same county, and the editor will receive mail matter addressed to the latter place.

We wish to say to our readers in this connection, that our manuscript box is calling for a number of essays on a variety of subjects. Will not our worthy contributors, who had laid by their pens during the busy season, grasp them now with fresh and high aspirations, and at once furnish us with the matter needed to make our paper interesting and instructive? Here is an opportunity of doing good—of working in the Lord's vineyard. Here you can use your talents, improve them, and be the means of accomplishing good. Here you may win members to the body of Christ, and add jewels to your crown of rejoicing and unfading glory. Here you may portray the beauties and excellencies of the Christian graces, and distribute the fruits of the Spirit. You may instruct the ignorant, admonish the wayward, reprove the guilty, restore the erring, comfort the disconsolate, strengthen the weak, feed the hungry, revive the despondent, and encourage the faithful. Here is a wide field open, and you are invited to enter and labor for the Good Master. His discipline is mild, his demands are reasonable, his service is pleasant and healthful, and his rewards are abundant, sure and satisfying. We hope that many of our contributors will respond soon.

J. W. B.

The following is from the Church Advocate, a religious paper published in the interests of the Church of God, more commonly known as Winebrennarians. From this it would seem that Elder Dennis who had called for the Maine Mission has gone with this people. May we not hope, that, as he has made one step toward the truth, he may yet be won? And may not this circumstance have a tendency to arouse us to the importance of having tracts, &c., to spread the knowledge of the truth? [AE.]

"To the brethren and sisters of the Church of God in North America—Dear brethren, we send you Christian salutation, wishing you grace, mercy and peace from God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ. We have abundant reason to be thankful for the kind, Christian visits of Elder George Sigler and Dr. George Ross, in March last, to open up the way for that able servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, Elder P. Loucks, who came to us last June, and has nobly defended the doctrines of the Bible, primitive Christianity and the faith and polity of the church of God. His preaching was well received by the great mass of the people. I had the privilege of conveying him to different places and to quarterly meetings, where he was well received by all. And while he was preaching and portraying the necessity of more Christian union, both in effort and feelings, the loud amens, and that is so, were heard in many parts of the congregation of some two thousand people, at the Hartford quarterly meeting. All excepting a few that would be captains and lords over God's heritage are praying and desiring your co-operation in sending us more preachers, to stay on the ground with us permanently, and labor with us and for us the coming fall and winter, for the upbuilding of the Redeemer's kingdom and the salvation of precious souls. There are a number of our ministers that are wanting ing to engage in protracted means of grace this fall and winter, with those that may come to build up the cause of primitive Christianity and the principles as taught by the Church of God. They ought to be here by the first, or as early as the middle of September next, and bring with them as many as three or four hundred of the histories and Church Polity, and some one or two hundred of the sermons on Baptism. They are called for and wanted. Also a few copies of all of your other books would sell well here, and be a means of introducing your Christian publications amongst us. When they come I will go with them or direct them to the most feasible places of doing the greatest amount of good, and where they will be well cared for in all these Christian efforts to establish the principles and doctrines of the Church of God amongst us.

May God direct us in all our deliberations and co-operations, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ. JOHN DENNIS.

Inquiry:

At the time the Annual Meeting was held near Salem, Virginia, we had expressed to that place a box of the Debate on Immersion. We failed to sell the books, except a few. We then gave the box into the charge of some brother, who said he lived in that neighborhood, and who was to report what he could do with them. He has never reported, and now we are unable to find out who he is. As we remember there were other brethren by when we gave them over into his charge, we make this public inquiry whether any of our readers know anything of the transaction, or of the books. Perhaps they are still lying at the meeting-house at which the meeting was held. We should regret very much to lose the books, as they are worth a considerable amount of money to us; and our southern trip has already been a great loss to us.

Expenses of Last A. M.

A number of brethren have been making inquiry in regard to the expenses of last Annual Meeting, how much has been paid, how much remains unpaid, who has paid, and who has not, &c. We would recommend that those who have the matter in hand make a full statement of the receipts and expenditures up to date, and publish said statement in the COMPANION. Let the congregations which have paid, be published with their respective credits. Some of the amounts yet unpaid are needed.

Answers to Correspondents.

MATTHIAS FRANTZ: According to our Book, the subscription to "Pious Youth," volume three, had not been paid. So if we send him the COMPANION in lieu of it you would owe us one dollar.

ISAIAH M. FOUCH. Will you please give us your address.

J. H. STARKEY'S address used to be Charleston, West Va., but bills sent to that address are being returned. Will some one give us his present address, or send us $7,05?

J. D. NEHER. No, sir; we have not got them.

DANIEL EVANS We make no charges for such notices. What will you have for the 50 cents?

J. B. SHARRETTS: Elder George Wolf's address is Lathrop, San Joaquin Co., Cal. It was formerly Stockton.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be writ en upon one side of the sheet only.

Physician Heal Thyself.

"And he said unto them, ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself." Luke 4 : 23.

Reading the C. F. C., No. 37, page 589, over the signature of Mary Rohrer, I read : "Our paper has had quite a revival since the A. M. I am glad to see quite a number of new correspondents ; and among them brother D. P. Sayler. But I hope he will trim his rod before he has occasion to use it again, especially with mine own sex." But before I got through the reading of the "scratches of her pen," I found that she herself had left long, rough and ugly knots on her rod which she so uncharitably used on the head of one of "mine own sex" ; who, perhaps, if she were conversant with all the facts, she would not have stigmatized as she did. I thought, "Physician, heal thyself." But to learn to see ourselves as others see us, is a lesson hard to learn, and but few learn it.

In the same No. and on the same page, I find a "Letter to Sister Hannah Knouff" over the signature of C. H. Balsbaugh," in which he says: "Brother Sayler is a modern Tishbite, very zealous for the Lord his God, and must needs call fire down from heaven, once in awhile. He is leonine, vigilant, fearless, and his corrections abound in adjectives which are terribly caustic."

Many who are familiar with the New Testament scriptures, are not sufficiently so with the Old Bible History to remember who is meant by the "Tishbite" here set forth as my prototype ; an explanation is necessary. When Moab rebelled against Israel after the death of Ahab ; and Ahaziah had fallen through a lattice in his upper chamber in Samaria, and was sick, he sent messengers to inquire of Baal-Zebub, the god of Ekron, whether he should recover of this disease. "But the angel of the Lord said to Elijah, the Tishbite, Arise, go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say unto them, Is it because there is no God in Israel, that ye go to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron?" Now therefore thus saith the Lord, Thou shalt not come down from that bed, but shalt surely die. And Elijah departed. When the messengers reported this to him, he inquired of them what manner of man he was, who had said this, they said he was a hairy man. and was girt with a girdle of leather about his loins ; and he said, it is Elijah the Tishbite. He then sent a captain with fifty men to bring Elijah to him. The captain approached him and said "Thou man of God, the king hath said, 'Come down.' Elijah answered, 'If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and consume him and his fifty." Please read the history of it in 2 Kings 1st chapter. This was the ancient Tishbite, and I am to be the modern, I deny it, there is no analogy.

"And his (my) corrections abound in adjectives which are terribly caustic." As this will not be understood by all the readers of the C. F. C., an explanation is necessary. Adjective, in grammar, is a word used with a noun, to express a quality of the thing named, or something attributed to it, or to limit or define it, or to specify or describe a thing, as distinct from something else. It is called also an attributive, or attribute. Thus in the phrase, a wise ruler, wise is the adjective or atttribute, expressing a particular property of ruler. (Webster). Now if the reader will please look up Vol. 17, page 97, and August No. page 225, and Vol. 18, No. 5, pages 97 to 112 inclusive. And Vol. 20, No. 11, pages 322 to 345 inclusive, of the Gospel Visitor, he will find letters written by brother Balsbaugh, and in them it will appear who calls down fire from heaven, and whose corrections abound in adjectives which are terribly caustic. How appropriate the proverb, Physician, heal thyself. I wish, however, not to be understood to mean that there was too much fire, or too much caustic in brother Balsbaugh's corrections ; under the circumstances I believe it is not only what the man of God ought, but will do ; and what brother Balsbaugh says of me I can well apply to him, and I here reproduce them, and say of him, "Brother (Balsbaugh) is a modern Tishbite, very zealous for the Lord his God, and must needs call fire down from heaven once in awhile. He is leonine, vigilant, zealous, and his corrections abound in adjectives which are terribly caustic. He is the man of the Lord's host, a full armed Boanerges, with a moderate mixture of Barnabas in his temperament." Thus we stand in the same relation one to another. In the letters referred to brother Balsbaugh contends for the faith and practice of the brethren. In my letter to sister Hannah I did the same thing ; and in reding, each of us see fire and caustic in the other's letters. As physicians then let us heal ourselves, and not judge one the other.

To those who seem to busy themselves about my first to sister Hannah Knouff, I would say, don't worry your brains about it ; sister Hannah and I know each other from childhood ; and if she would see, or know anything in me not agreeable to her views she would be as ready to pitch into me as she was to let Elder Eby hear from her. Personally we are intimately friendly ; knowing each other since we know anybody, and the sister does not live in the church I love and respect more than I do sister Hannah. But when she takes the position to discuss a religious subject in a public periodical, she lays herself open to criticism and correction as do others. This she did in an attack on something that brother Eby had said or done she did not approve of in an article in the C. F. C. In the attack she declared herself a defender of certain ones in a departure from that faith and order I, with my fathers, have espoused as the faith and order God will accept ; and is the faith and order my fathers have believed, obeyed and defended in an uninterrupted or unbroken line of descent without change of name for one hundred and thirty-three years. In contending for that faith and order to be perpetuated I know no one after the flesh ; and sister Hannah in her attack on Elder Eby brought herself in direct conflict with the faith and order I both believe and defend, and of course cannot escape my criticism and correction ; in it, however, there was no unkind feeling personally. Sister Hannah's tender heart and sympathy overcomes her in opposing anything, and departurists from the faith and order she and I believe to be true can readily persuade her. This tender feeling is natural with her, having inherited it from the mother's side of her family. While my inherited nature is uncompromising firmness. So I say again, don't worry yourselves about sister Hannah and brother Sayler's business; they understand it best themselves; don't meddle with it, and you wont be hurt.

D. P. SAYLER.

"Inconsiderate Brethren."

In the COMPANION for September 16th page 590, a brother writes for the benefit of us "inconsiderate brethred." As he seems to think that I am the most inconsiderate I will try to heed his admonitions and at once consider what he has written.

"I have been mortified," &c., To be mortified is to be humbled. Humility will do us no harm, brother.

"But such a wholesale faultfinding as is contained in an article written by S. M. M., in No. 35, current volume, I had not seen."

This is the wholesale you refer to, viz: "I cannot see one article of the twenty-seven of any practical utility to the church." Now as I was so "inconsiderate" as not to see the worth of these articles which have cost nearly $200 each, you ought—if their cost indicates their value—to be able to show their worth so clearly that even the "inconsiderate" might see.

"Brethren, this should not be." "Inconsiderate brethren" must not consider the decisions of our A. C., but accept and believe without any consideration whatever.

"What impressions will such proceedings make upon the minds of the people?"

Proceedings that will not bear consideration will not make very favorable impressions "upon the minds of the people."

"What will the world think?" That the Brethren are searching the Scriptures to see if these things be so.

"When a question is once decided, every brother and sister should be satisfied until it could be brought up in regular order."

There is no necessity of bringing up a question "in regular order" if every brother and sister is satisfied. Who would bring it up?

"If we had less confidence in our own wisdom and more in that of our brethren," * * *

If we had more confidence in God and his word, and less in man, there would not be so many creeds, nor ordinances for "inconsiderate brethren" to consider.

"I would always submit to the decisions of our Annual Meeting."

I know a "good catholic" must believe in the infallibility of the Pope, but did not know that a brother showed his "imprudence and insubordination," by not believing in the infallibility of our Annual Councils.

"I could see no plan to please one who sweeps away every decision of our late Council, unless the brotherhood would appoint him to decide all the questions himself."

Brother, do not concern yourself about pleasing me. You and I are but dust, and it is not meat that the brotherhood spend time and money to please us.

If I swept the decisions away, why did you not sweep them back again? Why did you not tell us the benefits the church and the world have received from our Annual Councils? The aid given the Brethren's school, and the Sabbath-school. Aid given poor churches for the building of meeting-houses. Number of books and tracts published and distributed. Number of missionaries that have been equiped and sent to preach, &c., &c. Yes, brother, holding up the good that has been done will do more to stop the "fault-finding" you complain of, than all you can say or write in favor of believing an ordinance for no other reason than that it was so decided by our A. M.

S. M. MINNICH.

The Death Penalty.

I noticed in last number of C. F. C. an article written by D. P. Sayler, headed thus: "Is there any Repentance unto Salvation for Murderers?" On this subject I beg leave to differ with the writer. He says in one place, "That the willful, deliberate and premeditated killing of a fellow being, is a sin for which the law of God and the Commonwealth require the life of the criminal." In another place he says: "Believing as I do, that the sin of killing must be atoned for, by the life of the criminal" &c., we are glad to see and notice the fact that the religious press has taken up the subject of capital punishment, and is discussing the question of putting men to death by hanging. Some honest old Mosaics and Puritans stick to the old way of revenge, and according to their interpretation of the Scripture still demand "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." Some such men think if there were more men hung there would be less murder. We have not been able to take that view of the subject, since we have noticed where the death penalty has been abolished there is less crime and violence than before. For instance, Michigan abolished the death penalty in 1846, and for twenty-seven years no execution has taken place, and we have the best testimony that murders are less frequent and conviction more speedy, than when the gallows flourished in that State. Rhode Island abolished capital punishment in 1852, and for 21 years it has enjoyed greater tranquillity, with more safety to human life, than ever before. The people of these States are among the wisest our country affords. Wisconsin comes next. In 1853 she swept from her Statutes the law of vengeance. Twenty years confirm the wisdom of her course. Last comes Iowa, on the 20th April, 1872, her Legislature repudiated the law of blood for blood and life for life. Here is the experience of five States. Look at them; are they not peers of any other? If these be facts, and we have no reason to doubt their being facts, it is pretty good evidence that it is time hanging was abolished. I think there is a better method of dealing with criminals than brother Sayler would. I think hanging is unchristian, unsuccessful, and even barbarous. Restraint is one thing and revenge is quite another. In general, punishment should be inflicted for the purpose of maintaining law, for the good of the people, for their improvement and welfare. The people demand protection and not revenge. I think the people only need more correct Christian views on this subject. The prisoner should be educated and reformed; to teach him self-control should be the true object. His resources should go toward defraying the expense of his keeping, teaching, and training. The idea of revenge should not enter in. The aim should be to make better men and women of them, and fit them for the other world, and not to plunge them into eternity, prepared or not. It is cruel and wrong. The question is, shall we hang, kill, or imprison for murder? When we consider that the best men are liable to slip and fall, and yield to temptations sometimes, it ought to teach us charity, and induce us to help the weak, and instead of making them worse, try to make them better. God bless every effort made in behalf of poor sinners, and especially criminal sinners. Forgiveness is godly; revenge is ungodly.

May God in his mercy put into the hearts and heads of men to come to right conclusions, and in their appreciation of justice let them not forget mercy. If my views are not according to divine truth or the true interpretation of the Gospel, I will be thankful to receive correction on this subject, as I wish to seek after the truth. L. A. Dosch.

Brookville, Ohio.

Response to Brother M. J. Thomas.

Dear brother, in obedience to your request I will pen down a few ideas by way of exchanging thought with you, as well as with many others who are readers of the COMPANION. Our object should ever be to gain light, as well as give light. I had expected you would give me more light on the subject under consideration, with some scriptural testimony, or I should not have asked you the question. I did not know whether you are young or old in the Master's cause. That has nothing to say. But to the subject. You say in the second question, I asked and referred you to the scripture I did, it would seem to you as though I doubted the immortality, or future existence, of the soul. My dear brother, I did not say anything on either side. I believe all that the Bible holds forth. I only said I could not reconcile those passages of scripture, with the language you made use of, such as the soul is immortal and cannot die. I see a vast difference between having an existence, or to be exempt from death. And so it seems to be with the subject of mortality and immortality. The word immortality I believe does not occur once, before Christ rose from the dead. Then it occurs in the following six places: Rom. 2: 7; 1 Cor. 15: 53-57; 1 Tim. 1: 17; 1 Tim. 6: 15, 16; 2 Tim. 1: 10: Here we learn by old brother Paul, that he depended wholly on God, through Christ his Lord, for immortality; and outside of him (Christ) I can find none promised to the human race, the heathen not excepted. Without Christ all were under sin and death, no matter where their existence is, hence we learn from the apostles that the gospel was also preached to the spirits in prison, as also to them that are dead. It seemeth that the rich man had an existence after he was buried, yet he was separated from God, who is our life through our Lord Jesus Christ; and to be separated from God, by sin, is death in the deepest sense of the word. Now, dear brother, do not think hard of me if this does not agree with your view; for I am very ignorant, as far as natural philosophy is concerned, on this subject; what little I do know of it I learned from the Bible. So if the heathens had immortality dwelling in them, before Divine revelation, I was simply ignorant of it, and should like to learn it. I want to rightly divide the word of truth; hence we must first learn rightly to understand it. May we all have grace to serve acceptably, with reverence and Godly fear, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

JOHN FORNEY, Sen.

Falls City, Neb.

Letter From Paris.

HOTEL LONDRES, PARIS,
Sept. 8th, 1873.

DEAR FATHER AND SARAH: I have often thought of writing you, but we have been traveling so much lately, that we have had but little time to write. I think I wrote you last from Munich. From there we went to Insbruck, then to Linden, then crossed Lake Constance to Romanshorn, Switzerland, and to Zurich, where we spent several days There I made some inquiries for the name of Longenecker, and Eshleman, and they told me the Longeneckers were from near Lake Constance, and the Eshlemans from Zurich; but I did not see any of them. From Zurich we came to Luzerne. Then we took the tour of Lake Luzerne to Fluelen, then over the St. Gothard pass to Andermatt; then the Furca pass to the Rhone river; then over the Grimsel pass to Lake Riens, and Interlachen. From there to Berne, a very old town. Then to Freybourg, and Lussane, on Lake Geneva, down the lake to the city of Geneva, where we spent two very pleasant weeks. We like Switzerland very much better than we did Germany. On last Friday at five o'clock we left Geneva for Paris, and arrived here in this beautiful City on Saturday at four, after twenty-three hours' ride on the cars, very tired.

This is by far the most beautiful city we have seen in Europe. It is so large, we have not seen very much of it, but every part of it we have been in, is so fine. The buildings are so very fine, and the streets are the finest I ever saw. The parks, and gardens, and boulevard, are the finest I ever saw. We think Philadelphia is beautiful, but it cannot compare with Paris. However, we see a number of buildings that were destroyed by the late war. And still more that were destroyed by the Communes. It seems a shame they should destroy their own city in that way. We now expect to stay in this city perhaps a month. There is so much to see here. We always hear in America, that Paris is such a fearfully wicked city. Of course we do not know about that, but the people are very nice looking, more so than in any other city we visited, and it is the cleanest and neatest city we have been in. The streets are very wide, and paved very beautifully. It looks to me as though it were with cement of some kind. Last night we had a rain, and this morning I saw the men sweeping the water on the sides to run away. A person being in Paris would think it was the best governed city in the world; everything seems to move on like clock work.

We have all been so well all summer; we are so strong and walk a great deal. Olive often speaks of it. If she would visit you now, she could understand nearly all the German they could talk to her. Lannie can carry on a conversation in German. So can Howard, but Lannie can speak it the best of the three. But here they speak French. We get along very nicely, as Olive speaks French quite well, and the boys are very anxious to learn it. For my part I never expect to learn to speak French.

We expect to go to London from here. I do not know what our address will be there, but when I do I will write you again. I would like so much to hear from you, but it takes so long to get an answer from America, that we will not likely be here long enough to get one here. We now expect to sail for America early in December; we would like to get home before Christmas. I am beginning to think very long to get home.

However, I am so much stronger and healthier than I was when I left home. Olive is so much stronger. We have had a very hot summer, but since we came to Paris it is quite cool. It seems quite fall-like. I see that the leaves on the trees in the parks are beginning to color. I think it is quite early for that. It was very hot in Geneva last week, but that is so near Italy. We are now twenty-three hours' ride north-west of Geneva. I will close for this time. Remember me kindly to Yoder's family. The children join me in lots of love for yourself and Sarah. From your daughter, N. L. SPROGLE.

Brother Holsinger:

In a recent No. of the C. F. C. I noticed a communication, or rather an inquiry from a brother in Iowa, about the origin and use of tobacco. We think no one will hesitate to say that all things were created for some useful purpose, that tobacco was created by the same hand and is a member of the vegetable kingdom, as are thousands of other plants, and all have been wisely designed for some purpose, and no special mention made in the scriptures of how or what use it should be applied to. It is known to contain several medicinal properties, and as such it may become useful, but we do believe that the habitual use of it, is injurious to the system, and, like opium (the product of the poppy) the continual use of it enslaves the appetite, weakens the nerves, stupefies the brain, and hastens its victim to an untimely end.

The brother wishes to know whether the use of tobacco will debar any one from heaven. We all have our failings, but it is our duty and should be our desire to live as near to the example given us as possible, and when we are convinced of an evil and persist in its continuance, we do wrong. We would kindly say to the chewers of the weed, empty out the recesses of your pockets, and abandon its use; there will be no cavendish or meerschaum to destroy the pure air, or soil the white robes in the celestial world. And concerning the fashion of dress, we agree with a certain lady writing on that subject, that the present style of woman's dress "is in bad taste, bad hygiene, and bad morals." Our convictions are that dress should be made to promote health, to secure comfort, and please society, and to avoid undue extravagance.

E. W. FRICK.

Announcements.

Lovefeast in the Black Swamp congregation, Sandusky Co., Ohio, on Sat. Oct. 25th. The meeting is to be in the new meeting-house on the farm of Noah Henricks. Those coming on the Cleveland and Toledo Railroad, stop at Fremont; those from the west, stop at Lindsey. There will be conveyance to place of meeting on Friday. SAMUEL FINK.

LOVE-FEASTS.

Near Greenfield, Howard county, Kan. Oct. 18, and 19.

Bachelor Run, Carroll Co., Ind., Oct. 25.

Monocacy, Md., October, 17.

Meadow Branch, Md., Oct. 27.

Beaver Dam, Md., Oct. 25.

Dry Creek, Linn county, Iowa, Nov. 1, and 2.

Six miles west of Cussles station, Merced county, Cal.

Salomony Arm, Huntington, Ind., Oct. 28.

Buffalo, Valley, Union county, Pa., Oct 30.

Fairview, Appanoose county, Iowa, Oct. 31.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Franklin Grove, Lee county, Ill., Sept. 17th, Sister MARY BROWN, wife of brother Joseph Brown, aged 80 years 6 months and 8 days. Moved from Adams county, Pa., in 1856. Lived together 51 years and 6 months.

A. M. DIEHLDORFF.

LIST OF MONEYS RECEIVED for SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS, etc.,

Jacob Etter	$10 00	Wm Daily	5 00
E C Packer	50	B Harshbarger	8 50
John Knisley	6 50	A Metzler	05
Hannah Power	1 50	A H Cassel	75
H. Broadwater	85	Daniel Evans.	50
John Entsler	50

WE will admit a limited number of selete advertisements at the following rates
One Insertion, 20 cents a line.
Each subsequent Insertion 15 cents a line.
Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.
No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations.

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.

EDW'D J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurseymen and Seedsmen,
YORK, PA

THE "SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS.

Manufactured by E. P. Needham & Son, 143, 145 & 147 East 23d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passengers Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:

MT. DALLAS ACCOM., at 7: 50 A. M.

HUNTINGDON EXPRESS, at 2: 55 P. M.

RETURNING.

EXPRESS, leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.

ACCOMMODATION, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. In time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c.

W. H. BROWN, Supt.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE
By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.

This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works. "NIGHT SCENES," and "OUR FATHER'S HOUSE," nearly 100,000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. ZEIGLER & M'CURDY, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,

J. H. MOORE,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

Farm For Sale.

Guardian sale of 119 acres of choice land. Will be sold at public sale Tuesday, Sept. 23d, 1873. Well located, well watered, good improvements, bank barn, brick house, with all the necessary out-buildings; situated only 5 miles from good market; located in the western part of Milton Township, about midway between Smithville on the south and Pike Station on the A. & G. W. R. R., in Wayne county, Ohio, known as the Pinkerton farm. DAVID LITLE.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2.50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARICE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-4f.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary Word-for-word English Translation. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. WILLIAM AIKMAN, D. D. $1.50.

Man, in Genesis and in Geology; or the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. WELLS. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporaneous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Alms and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By GEORGE COMBE. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structure and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid,	1.25
Per dozen " "	13.30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 60 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC. Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1 25 per copy, postpaid, or $10.00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$2.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	2.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25

32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION. 25

BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA. $1.70

Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Moomaw, prepaid, .75

Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder,

Single copy, post paid,	.75
12 copies, by Express,	7.00
Pious Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid,	.45
Browns Pocket Concordance,	.60
German & English Testaments,	.75
NEAD'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid,	1.45
" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid	1.40
COMPANION Volume 3, bound post paid,	$2.7
Reserved at the office,	2.25

HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco-To ministers on Tobacco, Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63, Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interest.

288 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,

431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

Will fill orders for Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or PANACEA West of Ohio.

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.

Waynesboro, Franklin Co. Pa.

Will control the Eastern and Southern States. All letters should be carefully directed as above, and letters containing money must be registered.

This year was more favorable for curing herbs than any other for ten years, the medicine is therefore warranted perfect.

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, OCT. 21, 1873. NUMBER 42.

For the COMPANION.

What is Love?

"God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." 1 John 4: 16. Love is a chief attribute of Jehovah, the length, and breadth, and height, and depth of which are beyond our comprehension; for they are infinite. Between the three persons of the Godhead, love is unutterably full, perfect, and blissful; towards holy angels and Christians, God's love is an infinite, Fatherly complacency and affection; toward sinners, it is immeasurable compassion. It is shown in all his works and ways, and dictates his holy Law, but is most signally displayed in the Gospel. 1 John 4: 10. "Herein is love." Holy love in man would make the whole heart and soul supremely delight in and obey God, and cordially and practically love all beings according to their character—the good, with fellowship of soul, and the evil, with a Christ-like benevolence. Such a love would meet and fulfil all the ends of the law. Matt. 22nd, Rom. 13th. Without it none can enter heaven; and as the affections of every unrenewed heart are all mixed with sin, being given to forbidden objects, or selfishly and unduly given to objects not forbidden, we must be born again in order to see God; John 3: 3. How, then, shall this being born again of the water and of the Spirit, as the Savior himself says, be accomplished? Do you remember, on a certain occasion, the discourse of Jesus with Nicodemus, a member of the Jewish sanhedrim, at first a Pharisee and afterwards a disciple of Jesus? He was early convinced that Christ came from God, but was not ready at once to rank himself among his followers. He first appears as a timid inquirer after the truth, learning the great doctrines of regeneration and atonement. We see him cautiously defending the Savior before the senhedrim; and at last, in the trying scene of the crucifixion, he avowed himself a believer, and came with Joseph of Arimathea to pay the last duties to the body of Christ, which they took down from the cross, embalmed, and laid in the sepulchre; John 19: 39. Nicodemus, approaching the Savior by night saith unto Jesus, "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him." When we, then, as a people, have arrived to the years of maturity and understanding, Christ in his infinite mercy enjoins on us a work to be done—simply that "we must be born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, which is good and pleasing in the sight of Jesus. Then to become heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ, and subjects of his blessed kingdom, of which it is said, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," the things which God has reserved for his children, let us not depend too much upon earth and earthly things, for they must pass away, nor wealth, nor riches, for "the love of money is the root of all evil." Let us, then, as Christians, deny ourselves of the fashions, and customs, and vanities, and the deceitful lusts of the world, which so easily betray us. May we then cast our cares on Jesus, for he careth for us.

P. LANDIS.

For the COMPANION.

The Dead-line.

During the late war, it was sometimes the custom to bring a large body of captured soldiers together to be left in charge of a small number to guard them; but to make this number effective, a line was marked around the captives, who were made to understand, if they ventured too near this line it was at the peril of their lives. Some wanted more liberty than the narrow enclosure afforded them, hence ventured as near the line as they thought prudent, but too often paid the penalty by death; hence this line was called the Dead-line. The church of Christ is also surrounded by a Dead-line. Some of the members are dissatisfied with the narrow limits allowed them, and, in the exercise of judicious liberty, as they think, venture too near the confines of this world. They do not mean to step on dangerous ground, only to see how near they might go and be safe; but, alas!

"There is a line by us unseen,
That crosses every path,
The hidden boundary between
God's patience, and God's wrath."

The line is crossed, the soul is lost!

During my journey to the A. M., I was introduced to the daughter of a much beloved brother. She was intelligent and very amiable. On parting I said, "I was glad to call her friend, but would feel more happy to call her sister." Blushing, she said, "Why I have been a sister these three years." Her being so near the dead-line was the reason I made the mistake; for how could I tell to which side she belonged?

A young brother, reared by pious parents, went to a neighboring town to learn a profession. Being without guilt himself, he suspected none in others. He found the society of the young in that town agreeable. They would be a little fast sometimes, he thought, yet they were good fellows, and, not to seem too odd, he would take lemonade when they took brandy. His dress, too, must be made as near the fashionable mode as can be without offence to the church. One day I saw him come out of a saloon, and when he met me he requested me to endorse for him at the bank. His coming out of the saloon, and having no one to support but himself, did not please me, and I refused. Another brother endorsed to whom he owes the money yet. He soon after took one step too near the dead-line and fell I fear, never to rise.

Young brethren and sisters, I too am young, and have been near the dead-line of worldly folly once; and, like one who has heard the bullets whistle past his ears, I warn you to keep far enough away from the DEAD-LINE.

S. Z. SHARP.

Maryville, Tenn.

Christian Study.

I would have you, beloved friends, dwell deep in the matter of Christian study. He who knows himself a sinner, and Christ a Savior, is certainly justified; but we desire to be something more than saved. The babe in grace is the Lord's child; but we do not wish to be always infants; there is a time when we should be more than children. Christ's babes should grow up to be men in Christ Jesus; and my earnest entreaty to all professors, both old and young, is, "Let us seek deeply to study the word of God, that by feeding upon it we may grow." An instructed Christian is a more useful vessel of honor for the Master, than an ignorant believer. I do not say that instruction is all, far from it; there is much in zeal, and, with but slender knowledge, a man full of zeal may do a great deal; but if the zealous man has knowledge in proportion, how much more will he achieve? Dig deep in your researches into the Scriptures, beloved friends. I am always afraid lest any of you should take your doctrinal views from me, and believe doctrines merely because I have taught you to do so. I charge you, if I preach anything that is not according to the Lord's word, away with it!—and though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel than the gospel of Jesus Christ, away with it!—do not regard our persons for a moment, in comparison of divine authority. Study the character of Christ. Do not merely know that he is Christ, but who he is—whose Son he is, and what he is, and what he did, and what he is doing, and what he will do, and all the glorious hopes which cluster around his first and second advent—all the precious truths of the covenant of grace, and the glorious attribute of eternal love. Do not be afraid of what are called the "deep things of God." I do not mean that you, young beginners, are to give your thoughts o them, to the exclusion of the simplicities of the gospel; but at the same time, when you know the Lord savingly, go on to know yet more and more. Comprehend with all saints, what are the depths and heights. Entrench yourselves in the precious truths of God's word—no bulwarks are so strong.—Spurgeon.

Charity saves food and clothing. Carry an armful of wood, or haul a whole load it you can spare it, to some poor family, and the exercise will warm you so that you will not consume so much. The thought of the comfort you thus bestow on the poor, will warm your heart and your heart will warm your body, so you will not need so many clothes. Go and try it.—Pleasure Boat.

Always in haste, but never in a hurry. Leisure and I have taken leave of each other.

Selected by Geo. Hollsopple.

Judge Not.

"Who art thou that judgeth another man's servant! To his own master he standeth or falleth."

How do we know what hearts have vilest sin?
How do we know?
Many, like sepulchres, are foul within,
Whose outward garb is spotless as the snow,
And many may be pure we think not so,
How near to God the souls of such have been;
What mercies secret penitence may win—
How do we know?

How can we tell who sinneth more than we?
How can we tell?
We think our brother walketh guilty,
Judging him in self righteousness. Ah, well!
Perhaps if we had been driven through the hell
Of his untold temptations, we might be Less upright in our daily walk than he—
How can we tell?

Dare we condemn the ills that others do?
Dare we condemn?
Their strength is small, their trials not a few,
The tide of wrong is difficult to stem,
And if to us more clearly than to them
Is given knowledge of the good and true,
More do they need our help, and pity, too—
Dare we condemn?

God help us all, and lead us day by day,
God help us all!
We cannot walk alone the perfect way,
Evil allures us, tempts us, and we fall—
We are but human, and our power is small;
Not one of us may boast, and not a day
Rolls o'er our heads but each hath need to say,
God bless us all!

For the Companion.

Union.

"United we stand; divided we fall."

Union with God and his people here on earth insures salvation without a doubt. Then the question how to get into this union becomes important. The laws of a country tell us how to get into union with the people of that country, and so the law of God, which is to bring about this union between God and man, and man and man, explains to every one how to form this union. "God so loved the world that he gave his own Son, that whosoever believeth on him shall not perish but have everlasting life"; no distinction made, "whosoever will, let him come"; "Ho, ye that thirst come"; "all ye that are heavy laden, come"; how then will "we escape if we neglect so great a salvation?"

Reader, these are all quotations which ought to engage our thoughts from time to time. In order to be happy forever, we certainly must come into union with God, and in order to obtain this relationship we must comply with his requirements. God gives us his law, not to trifle with, to pick out what suits our taste or fancy, but to obey it in every respect. This union with God insures not only eternal life beyond the grave, but it will bring us into union with God's people here already in this world. Look at the drunkard, the adulterer, the thief, the swearer, and the many different characters in which man may serve Satan; after leaving his service and complying with God's will, they all agree on one common platform. There is no division in points of the doctrine of salvation; all are satisfied that God is no respecter of persons; all are brethren; all work for the interest of the church. They love one another; there is no prejudice, no hatred, no jealousy, for they remember that all are brethren; no seekers after popularity; no trying to please man only, for they glory in nothing but in Christ and his cause; no boasters of what they have done, or of what they will do, for they know that at best they are but servants of God, and that to him they look for their reward; no peace breaker, no going to law with one another, for Jesus decides all difficulties for them; no self-esteem, for at all times they know they are but dust. These all are principles, not of Christians, but of Satan's servants. The true Christian knows this, and therefore guards against being entrapped in any of them. Brethren, let us all consider this well, and let us all learn our duty; and if we learn it, let us by no means forget to practice it.

God loves union among his people. For this Jesus prayed. See John 17. And if God wants us to be in union with himself and with one another, he certainly has an object in view. Then why must we be in union with God? Hear what the Lord says: "Without me you can do nothing." This, without any further comment, shows to us the necessity of being in union with God. Then why the union among his followers? Christ says, that they should be one, even as he and the Father are one. Only for a moment imagine that there is only one Christian in this world. Who does imagine that he could stand against all the temptations of this wicked world? But then turn around and behold a church of believers, steadfast, immovable, all in union, and who can annihilate their faith? Well may the apostles exclaim, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" Then we must come to this conclusion: it is for our own good, if we are in union among ourselves. Oh! Brethren, I have often thought, if we are in union with God and his people, Satan and his angels may hurl their darts, but in vain. Skeptics may pick at what we write or say, yet it will be beneath the dignity of the profession we make, to mind slanders and misrepresentations made by persons who do not even claim to be Christians. They cannot harm us. They may do a good deal of boasting; they may parade their ignorance of the pure religion of Jesus, from week to week, in local and political newspapers, which should not be noticed by any one professing to belong to a Christian church; for it is well known that a person is known by the company he keeps.

Let us, then, consider it our duty to see to it that we are in union with God. This we can do by doing his will. And then let us be in love and union among ourselves. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." But will the world see this if we are at strife with one another? The matter is important. "How can we love God, whom we see not, if we hate our brother, whom we see? If we stand united on the platform of the Gospel, we shall gain the day; if Satan accomplishes his object in dividing us, and leading us astray, what will be our doom? Satan's delight and our misery, are certainly inseparable.

Now, brethren and sisters, let us all, every one of us, think of this prayerfully. It is true, we at times wound the feelings of our fellow members, but can we not, like good children, forgive each other heartily? Must we be ruined ourselves, in order to gratify Satan's wishes? Oh, God of heaven forbid this! Make us feel that we all need forgiveness from thee. Lead us all into peace and union with thee and with one another; and when our eyes are opened once to see our own good, we will give thee the praise and honor for all.

M. Hady.

The Four Seasons.

BY EUGENE J. HALL.

SPRING.

From beyond the purple clouds,
Through the mild and balmy air,
Starts the April sunshine down
On the world so fresh and fair,
'Mid the verdure, here and there,
Flow'rets peep with golden eyes;
Sparkling rain-drops gently fall,
Like a blessing from the skies.

In the field, the farmer toils;
Singing gaily, at his plow;
In the budding woodlands, near,
Hear the robins carol now.
All the earth seems glad and bright;
Winter's storms are gone from view.
Nature, from her rest, awakes
Once again to bloom anew.

SUMMER.

Through the sultry summer skies,
Light clouds slowly come and go,
Peacefully their shadows fall
On the dreamy world below.
Merrily the crickets sing.
In the meadows green and fair.
Summer roses are in bloom
And their fragrance fills the air.

Softly sweeps the southern wind,
O'er the fields of waving corn;
Joyfully along the air,
Sounds the welcome dinner horn,
And its echoes die away
'Mid the leafy wood near by,
Where beneath the trees at noon,
Lazily the cattle lie.

AUTUMN.

Gloomy clouds are flying past,
And the cool October breeze,
Sighing with a mournful sound
Through the branches of the trees,
Scatter Autumn's golden leaves
Roughly o'er the world so dear.
Summer's sunny days are past,
And the wintry storms are near.

Faded are the flowers now,
And the earth seems bleak and lone;
To a more congenial clime
Have the swallows homeward flown.
Gathered is the golden grain
From the stubble fields below.
Soon will weary nature find
Rest, beneath the winter's snow.

WINTER.

From the north the chilling winds,
With a solemn moaning, blow
O'er the dark and dismal world,
Covered by the fleecy snow.
Autumn's glory long has fled,
And the trees, so tall and bare,
Stand like sentinels, alone,
In the cold and frosty air.

See the crystal icicles,
Clinging to the frozen eaves,
And the cold, white window panes
Covered o'er with phantom leaves.
And the thrifty farmers, now
Seated by the cheerful fires,
Take their comfort and their ease,
While the good old year expires.

The Dead of Paris.

Brother Holsinger; for the benefit and information of the readers of the C. F. C., I send you the following which I cut out of the Baltimore Daily American, of Tuesday, Sept. 2nd, whose editor and proprietor, Charles C. Fulton, a gentleman of wealth, is with his daughters traveling over the European continent, and being an accomplished writer, furnishes a continued "Editorial Correspondence," in which he furnishes the readers of his paper with more reliable European manners, style and habits than they ever knew by any other source. Being in Paris, the nursery of fashion, he gives a paragraph on burials there. To an American the burial of the poor there is perfectly revolting. And the backward immersionist, who grounds his reasons for the backward action on the idea of burying the dead on the back, will find his strong reliance not very strong after all.

D. P. SAYLER.

THE DEAD OF PARIS.

'The whole business of burying the dead, and furnishing coffins, carriages, and all the requisites for funerals, is in the hands of an incorporated company, no one else having the right to interfere with the business. In fact it is, like the tobacco business, a source of large revenue to the Government. The monopoly is granted to this incorporated company under the title of Entreprise des Pompes Funebres, whose principal office is at 10 Rue Albert, whilst it has branch offices in each of the arrondisements with which the city is divided. The officers of this company take charge of the body and prepare for the funeral, just upon such a scale, and at such expense as the family may desire. Their schedule of prices are such as to suit the purses of all parties, and they are required to bury the very poor gratuitously. A "first-class funeral" is set down on the schedule as costing 7,181 francs (about $1 500), the cost of each article and expense being enumerated. There are nine other classes, the lowest costing 18 francs and 75 centimes, including the religious ceremonies. There are, however, no legal limits to the cost of first-class funerals, as it altogether depends upon the means and desire for funeral pomp of the family. The horses, hearses, carriages and drivers are all of a different character for each of these ten classes, the difference being in the age and spirit of the horses, the good looks of the drivers, the quality of their clothing, the harness of the horses, the ancient or modern build of the carriages, &c. The hearse is graded from a splendid structure down to a hand cart, and the extremely poor are merely furnished with a hand-barrow to enable the friends to carry the body on their shoulders to the grave. The quality of the grave clothes, the coffin, and everything else is graded to the price, as it may be ordered, from class No. 1 to class No. 10. Beside getting the dead poor buried without cost, the Government receives from the company 8$3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the produce of funeral ornaments, and 15 per cent. on all articles furnished. The revenue from these sources is quite large, and as the cemeteries are also the property of the city government, the dead, as well as the living, have to contribute their quota to beautifying Paris. The dead poor are only allowed to occupy the ground for five years, when their bones are sold for agricultural purposes, and the space they occupied given to some new claimant for the privileges of the soil. There are three kinds of graves in the cemeteries even for those who pay for the right of sepulture. There are some who purchase the perpetual right for their friends to occupy the soil, but it is generally conceded for five years or more, subject to renewal. If not renewed, the bones are taken up, and the ground prepared for lease to some new comer. In the common graves, or as they are called fosses communes, the poor are gratuitously buried four and a half feet deep in coffins placed close to, but not on top of each other. This economizes space, as well as saves labor in their removal when the five years have expired.

This will all seem revolting to the American reader, but it is not half so bad as the vault system at Naples, where there are three hundred and sixty-five vaults, one for each day in the year. One of these vaults is opened every day in succession, and the dead poor of that day, ranging from twenty to fifty, men, women and children, tumbled in naked, head foremost, a cart load of lime thrown upon them, and the round slab on the mouth of the vault sealed until its turn comes again next year. The most revolting sight we ever witnessed was the throwing the bodies in one of these vaults, the number being twenty-three. They were brought out of the chapel, stripped naked, all ages and sexes, taken by the heels, and lowered down, head foremost, through the narrow circular opening. In order to scatter them around in the vault, whilst suspended by the heels, they were made to vibrate back and forward, and when sufficient momentum had been obtained to place them where desired, they would strike against the walls with a dull thud, and the man would walk leisurely back for another body. He actually proposed to open and allow a peep into a vault that had been closed two days for a franc, which was respectfully declined. The sight he desired to exhibit was the revel of the rats among the bodies, which are said to swarm from one vault to another as soon as the new bodies have been deposited and the opening sealed. These European countries are bad locations for the poor man to live in, and still less satisfactory for him to die in.

Among the items of city receipts last year in Paris are the following: Dues on burials 696,000 francs ($120,000); sale of lands in cemeteries, 1,546,000 francs ($255,000.) We do not, however, find any return for the sale of human bones, which is probably a perquisite to the grave digger.

"They Shall Hunger no More."

Rightly considered, this is one of the most beautiful and comforting promises in all God's word, but we are too apt to lose the force of it, from the idea generally attached to it, of its reference to purely physical hunger. There are many of our Savior's dear children who have known what it is to feel all the pangs of unsatisfied craving for the bread of this life, but the most of us have had no such experience, for from childhood we have never lacked a sufficiency of good, wholesome food, and so in reading these words as a part of the description of our future glorious home, we do not feel as if they were meant for us, and thus pass them by often unheeding.

But a little thought and attention will convince us that exemption from physical hunger is but a small part of the blessing promised, and who of us is so blessed as not, at times at least, to hunger sadly in spirit, mind and heart? Indeed, we can scarce be Christ's disciples, if we do not know something of spiritual hunger; the "hungering and thirsting after righteousness" upon which he himself pronounces a blessing. We must often long for more of his grace, and love, and Spirit in our hearts, for a greater likeness to him, and holiness in inner and outer life. And we hunger for a sight of his blessed face, for "the King in his beauty," that we may "see him as he is," crowned in glory, yet ever, always, our loving, sympathizing Savior. Then shall we find plentiful provision for our longing souls.

Again, how many of us know what it is to hunger in mind, to thirst after knowledge. There is so much to be learned, and so little time to learn it in! Our minds are at best so weak, and we can comprehend so little of nature's mysteries that we try in vain to solve. And with some of us the infirmities of the flesh weigh so heavily and the days are so full of cares, for the dear ones at home, or the struggle for bodily subsistence, that there is scarcely any time or strength left for the acquiring of that knowledge, for which we so ardently long. But, friends, let us take courage, and learn all we can here, knowing that when we reach our eternal home our minds, with every other part of our natures, shall be satisfied, and go on improving from age to age.

But such deprivations are, after all, easy to bear compared with heart hunger, and who that has attained years of maturity but knows something of this? Who has not buried some dear friend, or wept over the separation from those dear as life itself, or worse still, mourned over the ruin of some darling one, who might have been the greatest blessing and comfort earth could offer? Who have not seen bright, beautiful hopes of happiness or usefulness blasted in a moment, and buried the ruins in his own heart? How many are there that have no graves in them? And think of the many lonely ones, to whom God in his providence has denied the joys of kindred and home, and whose whole lives are a constant struggle to submit cheerfully to his decree, and still the passionate cries of their hearts for the love that is so bountifully bestowed on others. Surely to such this passage speaks most eloquently. "They shall hunger no more." No more of these intense longings, these unsatisfied cravings after holiness, knowledge and happiness. No more struggles for perfect submission to and unfailing trust in our Savior, but the feeling with light, and joy, and unutterable bliss, of spirit, mind and heart. Does it not make us feel like crying out,

"O mother dear, Jerusalem,
When shall I come to thee?
When shall my sorrows have an end?
Thy joys when shall I see?"

—Church Advocate.

For the Companion.

Baptism—A Review. No. 2.

The writer feels his unworthiness and inability; but, according to promise in a former article, I would refer the reader to a few more passages in that blessed book called the Testament of the Son of God—that perfect law of liberty, which, if properly and strictly complied with in this life, will grant us the privilege of basking in the light of eternal felicity, and to pluck of the ambrosial fruit from the tree of life while eternity rolls its ample round. It makes no difference how poor we are, nor how ragged, nor how weak or frail, nor how rejected and despised of men, nor how unworthy, through the worthiness of Christ and hearty obedience to his will, shall we be made worthy beyond the grave. Oh, rejoice, ye destitute of the world, Christ for our sakes became poor, and through his poverty shall we be made rich! Why then should we despond and lose sight of the prize beyond the tomb? for our light affliction is not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed.

But to the subject. "And then went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins." Mark

1 : 5. "And were baptized of him in Jordan." Matt. 3 : 6. "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water." Matt. 3 : 16. "Jesus came from Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan." Mark 1 : 9. We are taught that, in the month of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. We have given two or three; and from the construction of the passages, any child that can read, who was not taught otherwise, would gather the idea that baptism was performed in the water, and not out of the water.

I will now give some more testimony. See Acts 8 : 38, "And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him."

Is it not plain, and conclusive, that baptism was, and is to be, performed in the water, and under, as we will try to show? The inspired apostle, in writing to his Roman brethren, calls baptism a burial. It seems as though he wanted them to keep in memory how and why they were baptized. He says, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death." Rom. 6 . 3, 4.

The language is explicit, that they had been buried with Christ, not in the sepulchre. No, any one admits that; for Christ was buried alone in the sepulchre. How then? The apostle says, "In baptism;" "that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." We understand from the passage, that there is to be a likeness; that is, we are to represent his death, in a likeness in baptism; which can only be done in baptism by immersion. "Knowing this," says the apostle, "that our old man is crucified with him."

For farther evidence, see Heb. 10th chapter. The apostle there plainly tells us how we shall enter into covenant relation with God. He says, "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart." Yes, friendly reader, if you have never yet come to God, come with a true heart; not like Baalam, and many others who desired their own way, but like Saul of Tarsus, who said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled (not the head, as Brooks will have it, but our hearts sprinkled) from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed." Brooks says, "No washing in baptism;" Paul says, "Our bodies washed with pure water." Dear reader, there is a wrong somewhere. Paul says he is "a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God;" Brooks says he is a minister of Christ, called to preach the gospel. Both claim to be ministers of Christ, and yet differ so much in their instructions. The apostle says, 'One Lord, one faith, one baptism"; while Brooks tells you, "sprinkling or pouring is baptism." These are evidently two different modes; because they are administered after two different forms, or fashions. And he will reluctantly immerse an applicant, when insisted upon, and call it baptism; which is, undoubtedly, the third form of performing the ordinance of (what he calls) baptism.

The apostle means, when speaking to the Ephesians, (4 : 5,) "One God and Father of all," one faith and practice with all his children; because we are taught to be in the unity of the faith, that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine.

It is passing strange, that men of intellect and talent, who believe in the ubiquity of God, and accept the New Testament scriptures as his Will and Testament, and profess to be ministers of Christ, yet assume the effrontery to abrogate the divine behests couched therein. Yes, dear reader, the apostle evidently meant just what he said—"One Lord, one faith," and one mode or manner in which the holy ordinance of Christian baptism should be performed.

I will notice, for the benefit of the reader, another passage, which I think unmistakable for all earnest and honest seekers after truth. The apostle, in his exhortation to constancy, and to beware of philosophy and vain traditions, says to the Colossians, 2 : 12, "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." Here we understand that the Colossian brethren were buried in baptism; that they were obedient to the heavenly call; that they had represented the death and burial of the son of God in baptism, which can only be done by being born of water, as was said of Nicodemus, emerging from, as we understand it. As stated before, there is to be a likeness in baptism; for if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. Peter has it "The like figure." I would here ask the question, What is a likeness? Were I to tell you, dear reader, that I had your likeness, you would at once know what I meant by the word likeness; you would know at once that I had a something which represented your person to me, because it looks like you: it is your likeness, it represents to me your visage, your form, size, your very person throughout. I know how you look, because I have your likeness; it looks just like the person it represents. Even so, we are taught, we should represent Christ in baptism, that as we have been buried with him in baptism, or by baptism, even so we also should walk in newness of life. The apostle says, "knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him." As Christ tabernacled here in the flesh, and was crucified upon the cross, and was buried, or interred in the tomb, and again brought forth to life by the resurrecting power of God, even so must the subjects of his kingdom first be obedient to the crucifixion of sin, or, in other words, be crucified from the life of sin, buried in baptism, and rise to a newness of life, that we henceforth should not serve sin.

I would remark here that the word crucify means to kill; and when any thing is killed, it is dead, and when anything is dead, it does not exist with any vitality whatever. I do not understand the term death to mean extinct, annihilated, but simply a separation; hence it is that those who wish to enter the kingdom must be obedient to the heavenly call. They must crucify the old man, as it is termed. Sin must be dead, or separated from the body. And now a burial must next take place; and a resurrection to a newness of life, or, as the Savior says to Nicodemus, "Born of water,"—emerge from and out of into a new state of being. How beautifully do all harmonize,—both the water birth of which the Savior speaks, and the burial of which the apostle speaks,—when viewed with the scrutinizing principles of language. Yes, friend Brooks, to become legal heirs, legitimate children, we must enter the kingdom according to the directions which the king has given us—"born of water and of the spirit."

I am aware of the fact, that it is a very popular doctrine in the world, that the Spirit birth must precede the water birth; but I will take the Savior's word for it. He says, "Born of water and of the Spirit." And as we have submerged ourselves into the spirit of disobedience, from the unrrow way into the broad way, so now must we emerge from and out of that disobedient spirit and walk in newness of life, after we are risen from this burial, or baptism, which we are trying to investigate. I maintain that the two births, of which the Savior spake to Nicodemus, are so closely connected, that they take place about the same time, and is to be an act upon the part of the person just entering the kingdom. The gift of the Holy Ghost is a something which belongs to the functions of the office of the triune God in the conversion and salvation of man, which will be disposed of, and shed upon us, at his own good pleasure either before or after baptism, as God himself may see fit. And let me further say, that when one has received the gift of the Holy Ghost, that person has received a Spirit which will lead him into all truth; he will not reject a part of the truth, but will accept and obey the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, as Peter tells us, "seeing you have purified your souls in obeying the truth thro' the Spirit." We see from Peter's language, that it is through the spirit that the truth is obeyed. So we say again, that when a person receives that good Spirit, he leads him into all truth—will cause him to obey all the truth. One might ask, what is truth? The Savior in his ardent devotions to his heavenly Father, says, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." We also understand from the Savior that the words which he spake were not his, but the Father's which sent him.

A. STALNAKER.

To be continued.

To Thee.

I bring my sins to thee,
The sins I cannot count,
That all may cleansed be
In thy once opened Fount.
I bring them, Savior, all to thee;
The burden is too great for me.

My heart to thee I bring,
The heart I cannot read,
A faithless, wandering thing,
An evil heart indeed.
I bring it, Savior, now to thee
That fixed and faithful it may be.

To thee I bring my care,
The care I cannot flee;
Thou wilt not only share,
But take it all for me.
O loving Savior, now to thee
I bring the load that wearies me,

I bring my grief to thee,
The grief I cannot tell;
No words shall needed be,
Thou knowest all so well.
I bring the sorrow laid on me,
O suffering Savior, all to thee.

My joys to thee I bring,
The joys thy love has given,
That each may be a wing
To lift me nearer heaven.
I bring them, Savior, all to thee.
Who hast procured them all for me.

My life I bring to thee,
I would not be my own;
O Savior, let me be
Thine ever, thine alone!
My heart, my life, my all I bring
To thee, my Savior and my King.

—Sunday Magazine.

For the COMPANION.

On Friends Departed,

We lay our friends away with tearful and aching hearts, and think, "When will the time come when we shall meet beyond the river to part no more?" To-day we have our friends, and to-morrow they are gone. The fell destroyer comes to rich and poor, high and low; all are taken and borne away to worlds unseen by us. The grass may grow and the flowers may bloom over the graves of our departed ones, and we are left alone to mourn their loss. The husband may lay his wife in the grave; the mother, her child; and the sister, a kind and affectionate brother, and feel that their place can never be filled; and all the while they are only ties to draw us onward where death can never come. We know that the things of this life will wither, and fade, and pass away, as though they had never been. The heart may yearn for kindred and friends, but let us remember that they are only lent to us, and soon all must pass away.

Say not thou wert not born to die
By sudden means and ways,
While thick around thee dangers lie;
Nor count thy living days.
For often times when we most feel
From death and gloom secure,
The phantom in our midst will steal,
And death knocks at the door.

CARRIE L. ROELKEY.

DISCONTENT.—Some people are never content with their lot, let what will happen. Clouds and darkness are over their heads, alike whether it rain or shine. To them every incident is an accident or calamity. Even when they have their own way, they like it no better than your way, and, indeed, consider their most voluntary acts as matters of compulsion. We saw a striking illustration the other day of the infirmity we speak of in the conduct of a child about three years old. He was crying because his mother had shut the parlor door. "Poor thing," said a neighbor compassionately, "you have shut the child out." "It's all the same to him," said the mother; "he would cry if I called him in and then shut the door. It's a peculiarity of that boy, that if he is left rather suddenly on either side of a door, he considers himself shut out, and rebels accordingly." There are older children who take the same view of things.

ATTENTION.—A child should be early instructed to be attentive to the wants of others—more especially to those of his mother. He should, for instance, be taught, on her entering the room, to offer the chair he is sitting upon to his mother; or, if he be old enough, to hand her a chair; to open the door for her either upon her entrance or upon her exit from the room, to be attentive while his mother, or any grown-up person, is speaking, and not to interrupt them in their conversation. These little acts of courtesy are very engaging in a child. There is something very winning—especially in a child—in attention to the wants and to the feelings of others. Attention is like good words—"worth much and costs little," and is the distinctive qualification of a gentleman.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Oct. 21, 1873.

Woman's Sphere and the Covering Question.

Considerable space has been given in our columns to the discussion of the proper head-covering for the sisters; and if all must be allowed to relieve themselves on this subject, much more must yet be given. Some of our readers are becoming wearied with it, and think the discussion would better be dismissed, at least, for a while; and, in fact, we think so ourselves. We do not see why so much space should be given to so little purpose. This we say, not because the articles on this subject were not interesting, but because there are certain facts that will not yield to anything and everything that may be said to the contrary. Facts are stubborn things, as every one must discover who opposes them. Will our readers indulge us, while we indite what may or may not be of service to them?

1. That the sisters ought to wear a modest covering on their heads, especially when praying, or speaking to edification, is a fact so clearly stated, that no amount of reasoning, fair or unfair, can change it. It has been attempted for ages, and in all sorts of ways, but it is still there, and will be there, while the sacred scriptures shall endure.

2. Some understand Paul to refer only to married women; and that they should wear a covering in token of their subjection to their husbands. Who invented this theory we do not know; and why any one who can read for himself should accept of it, we cannot tell. This we know, that Paul did not teach so, unless woman and wife are synonomous terms, and "Every woman" means only married women. Paul does not once mention husband or wife in the entire context. He is not discussing the relation of husband and wife, but of the sexes—man and woman.

3. Head, as used in 1 Cor. 11: 3, ctabibi, means one that has rule and pre-eminence over others. Thus God is the head of Christ; Christ is the head of the church, and "of every man;" and so is the husband the head of the wife, and the man the head of the woman. See Eph. 5: 23; 1 Cor. 11: 3. God, the Father of all, is the head of all; but under him Christ is "the head over all things to the church," (Eph. 1: 22); and under Christ, the man is the head of the woman, and the husband the head of the wife. Here are facts and principles as irreversible as the laws which govern the universe. God, the Father, as the originator of all, is the natural and rightful Governor of all; Christ, as the Mediator, the Redeemer and Savior, is the natural head—the rightful Governor—of the church—the proper ruler over all mankind, as he died for all. While we are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, he, though our elder brother, is our head; hence we must worship God in the name of Christ. Thus far there is no difference: "There is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus;" Gal. 3: 28. But it is clear, that, under Christ; man is the head of the woman. This headship of man over the woman is natural, fixed, and unchangeable; arising in the creation of man and woman. Man, "is the image and glory of God; but the woman is the glory of the man;" "man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man; neither was man created for the woman, but the woman for the man." 1 Cor. 11: 7—9. It would be as easy to reverse the order of creation, and set aside the decrees of the Almighty, in anything else, as to do away with this natural, God-decreed headship of man over the woman. Upon this unchangeable relation between the sexes, between the man and the woman, is based the headship of the husband over the wife; and not until you can pluck the sun from his centre, or the moon from her orbit, or interchange their comparative glory, can you change this relationship between man and woman.

As the sun and moon are equally necessary in their spheres, to accomplish the purpose of the Almighty in their creation; and as neither can fill the place of the other or the place of both; so are the sexes alike important in their proper spheres, and neither sex alone can accomplish the design of God in their creation, and neither can fully fill the station of the other. This is clearly set forth in the 11th verse, "Nevertheless, neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord." This text also fixes the fact, that Paul is not speaking only of husband and wife, but of the sexes; for, in the Lord, a man may be without a wife, and vice versa.

4. Every righteous government regards the just rights and claims of the governed, and protects its subjects against oppression and wrong. The government that does not respect the just claims of its subjects and shield them from oppression, injury, and violence, is unrighteous, rotton, and unworthy of the name of a government. So every just head, ruler, or governor will have respect to all the rights and just claims of his subordinates and subjects. He who has no respect for the welfare, the happiness, the peace and prosperity of those over whom he bears rule or pre-eminence, is unjust, unrighteous, and is unworthy the name of head or ruler; and hence the man who disregards the rights and just claims of the female sex, be he married or unmarried, sacrifices his right to the title of man, or head of the woman. Woman is the subordinate and weaker sex, and hence, in the married relation the woman is the weaker vessel. Peter says, 1 Peter 3: 5—7, "After this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection to their own husbands: even as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement. Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honor unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered." This comparative relationship between husband and wife, be it remembered, is in harmony with, and grows out of, the natural and created relation of the sexes, man and woman.

5. According to the principles developed in the third and fourth sections, man, as the head of the woman, must give honor to her, respect her rights, regard her purity, and protect her virtue; and while the woman is subordinate to man, and must regard him as her rightful and created head, she has upon man the power, the just right, to claim his protection. This headship of man over the woman, and the consequent power, or claim, that the woman has upon the man, is aptly and properly set forth by the covering on the head of the woman.

This covering, therefore, is more than a token of subordination: it as a token of the power belonging to the woman, to claim the protection of her head, the man. When a woman places the covering on her head, she thereby says: "While I am willing to move in my proper sphere, this covering is a token that I have the power to claim protection in it." In accordance with this, Paul says, (verse 15), "For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head, because of the angels." The angels are our ministering spirits, and it is to their joy when we perform our duties to God and to one another: it is to their joy when man and woman move in their natural and proper spheres, and mutually discharge their obligations.

6. Having now shown the principles which demand an artificial covering on the head of the woman, we will proceed with some comments on the 11th chapter of 1 Corinthians.

Verse 1. Paul admonishes them to follow him as he follows Christ.

2. He commends them for their remembrance of him, and of his teaching.

3. He reminds them of the facts, that the man is the head of the woman; Christ is the head of every man, and God is the head of Christ.

4. "Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoreth his head, (Christ)."

"By worshipping God with an artificial covering on his head, he signifies that he acknowledges another head, under Christ, which is not the case, and hence he dishonors Christ.

5. "But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head, (the man,) for that is even all one as if she were shaven."

By worshipping with her head uncovered, she sets forth, that she disclaims man as her head, under Christ, placing herself in his sphere, and thus she dishonors the man. Notice, "every woman," not only married women.

"For that is even all one as if she were shaven," The hair, the natural covering, sets forth the headship of Christ, and should be worn by both; but as the woman is the weaker vessel, she should have more of the natural covering, and this she can only have by the man shortening his hair. But for either of them to shave their heads, is signifying that they disown Christ as their head. If a woman shaves off the natural covering, she dishonors Christ; and if she wears no artificial covering, she dishonors man, her head under Christ: it is the same in reference to the headship of man, as shaving is in reference to the headship of Christ.

6. "For if a woman be not covered, let her also be shorn or shaven; but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered."

If a woman wears no artificial covering, and thus dishonors the man, let her also be shorn, and signify that she stands on a level with man, or let her be shaven and thus set forth her insubordination to Christ; she may as well declare the latter as the former, as both are immutable. But if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn to signify her equality with man, or to be shaven (as a harlot) to show her insubordination to Christ, let her wear an artificial covering to signify that she is moving in her proper sphere, and claims the protection of the man and of Christ.

7. "For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God; but the woman is the glory of the man."

These obligations arise from the relationship which man and woman sustain to each other and to God. As man is the image and glory of God, and his only head under God is Christ, he should not wear an artificial covering: the natural covering sets forth that fact. But as "the woman is the glory of the man," not only is Christ her head under God, which is shown by the natural covering; but man is also her head under Christ, hence she ought to cover her head to signify that fact.

8. "For the man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man."

If man were of the woman, then would he be the weaker vessel, and he then should cover his head; but as the woman is of the man, she is subordinate, and ought to cover her head.

9. "Neither was the man created for the woman, but the woman for the man."

Not only the order of the creation, but the purpose of God in the creation, places the woman in a subordinate sphere; hence she should glory in it, and move in it, and signify it by covering her head.

10. "For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head, because of the angels."

As the man is the head of the woman by creation, it is his right to rule and her duty to be subject; but it is his duty to honor her and to protect her, and she justly claims this honor or care: therefore the woman ought to wear the token of this relation and power. This she ought to do because of the ministering spirits, whose joy it is to see the man and woman move in their natural and proper spheres, performing their respective and relative duties.

11. "Nevertheless, neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord."

In the Lord, a man or woman may be unmarried, but their relationship is natural, their spheres are fixed; hence they are not transferable nor changeable. This being the case, neither can take the place of the other, and neither can fill the purpose of God in the creation of both; and therefore as members of the body of Christ, they should keep in their proper places and perform their respective and relative duties.

12. "For as the woman is of the man: even so is the man also by the woman; but all things of God."

God has created all things, including man and woman in their spheres, and hence is the head over all things. He governs all and offers protection to all. The woman is of the man, and is subordinate to man; but the man is by the woman and is under obligations to her: for this reason they should stand by each other, and perform their duties to each other and to God. Let the woman be subject to her head, but let him govern righteously, and protect and honor her as the weaker vessel; and thus let them discharge their duties in their spheres, glorifying God under Christ their head, and receive his protection and blessing.

13. "Judge in yourselves: Is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?"

Let your own reason now decide this question. Consider the order of creation and the purpose of God in the creation of the woman for the man; think of the woman's natural and subordinate state, and of the natural and created headship of man; and tell me, Is it becoming for a woman to worship God without covering her head? No, your reason recoils, and says, "She ought to cover her head, in token of her relation to man, and her claims upon man."

14. "Doth not even nature itself teach you, that if a man have long hair, it is a shame to him?"

Taking a full view of the creation, do you not see that man is in a pre-eminent sphere? Do you not see that it is suitable that he should have less of the God-given covering to represent his standing? Do you not see that wearing long hair is a token of effeminacy? Do you not understand, that, by wearing long hair, as the woman does, he shows that he is laying aside his dignity and assuming the sphere of the weaker vessel? Does not all this teach you that it is a shame for the man to wear long hair? It ought to teach you this lesson; and you ought to be able to see it.

15. "But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her; for her hair is given to her for a covering."

Long hair is a glory to the woman; for in her natural state she is subordinate to man, and it is becoming for her to have more of the natural covering than man has: thus she sets forth her true relationship to God, under Christ and the man. "Her hair is given to her for a covering." As the hair betokens that man and woman are under Christ; and as the woman is also subordinate to the man let her have more of this natural covering. This is suitable, becoming; therefore let the man shorten his hair, and the woman have long hair.

16. "But if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custom, neither the churches of God."

If a man will have his own way; if he will not shorten his hair to set forth this relationship; if he will wear long hair and signify that he is one of the weaker vessels; if he will disregard the dictates of reason, give him to understand, not only that it is a shame to him, but that he is violating the custom of the apostles and of the churches organized by them. Knowing this, if he has any respect to the voice of nature, and to the custom of the apostles and the churches of God, he will be more considerate and prudent.

But there is a spirit of insubordination at work, not only in the world, but also in the church; and those who are influenced by it have many questions to ask, and objections to offer: they seem to be afraid of doing too much. Some of these quibblings we shall notice, not that we expect to stop their cavillings, but to comfort and encourage those that are willing to be submissive. As Paul reasons from the nature of the case, we shall also be directed by reason.

1. Should this covering be worn all the time?

We answer, as this covering is to be a token, it should be worn by the women whenever they expect to be seen. Again, as the relation shown by the covering is fixed and immutable, the token should be worn constantly. This being so, it is easily seen how unbecoming it is for the woman to pray or prophesy with her head uncovered.

2. Should unmarried women wear a covering?

Paul is not speaking of husband and wife, but of man and woman; hence the unmarried are under the same obligation to wear the covering.

3. Should the married and unmarried wear the same kind of covering?

Reason would teach us, that it would be prudent that there should be a difference either in the fabric, color, or form of this token covering, so as to signify whether a woman is married or unmarried.

4. What is the proper covering?

In the days of the apostle it was a cumbrous veil; but it is no more to be contended that the same inconvenient covering must be worn now, as it is that all other garments must be of the same fabric and form then worn. The covering should be convenient, and according to the spirit of the gospel and our holy religion, it must be plain and modest. Any covering that does not possess these characteristics is not a proper nor acceptable covering. Now for the cap. Is a plain cap convenient? It certainly is more convenient than any other covering ever worn by woman. Is a plain cap a modest covering? The most foul-mouthed infidel will not say it is not, if he speaks his convictions. On what grounds then can the cap be objected to? On no reasonable or scriptural grounds. It is only objected to by such as have an inclination to worship the goddess of fashion. Let any other covering be adopted, and, if there be no change to conform to ever-shifting fashion, in a very few years the covering will seem as singular as the cap; and in addition to its oddity, it would, no doubt, savor somewhat of the ridiculous. Not only the members of the body of Christ, but very many interested spectators, have, after witnessing our orderly observance of the Lord's supper, testified to the unparalleled modest appearance of the sisters. This display of modesty is so great, that respectable spectators, through its admiration, lose sight of oddity.

"God is a God of order;" and all his works are conducted by wisdom and in an orderly manner; and hence, if the Scriptures did not say, "Let all things be done decently and in order," even nature should teach us, that it would be prudent and right to have order, and not confusion, in the covering. The following is the argument: In the worship of God everything should be done decently and in order; but the covering of the woman's head is required in the worship of God: hence, the covering of the woman's head in the worship of God should be decent and in order.

Again: the covering must be plain and modest, to be acceptable; but the cap is a plain and modest covering; therefore, the cap is an acceptable covering.

There might be other convenient, plain, modest coverings; but, if we use more than one kind, we destroy the order. We do not say that there never should be a change of the order; but this we do say: when we have an established and acceptable order, we should not change it without some good reason. No reason can be good, unless that which is proposed is better than that which is established: if it be only as good and not better, there is no argument for the change. Now we confidently assert that the contentious spirits have never yet proposed any other order as convenient, plain, and modest as the cap, to say nothing about better. In fact, they have never proposed any other, and the only apparent design is, to oppose order.

5. Would not plain bonnets, such as are generally worn by our sisters, answer the purpose?

Bonnets are not worn for that purpose; and we cannot see how they would answer a purpose for which they are not worn. Bonnets are worn by women for the same purpose that men wear hats—to protect from the sun's heat and the inclemency of the weather. This purpose, when properly made, they answer very well; otherwise, they are merely for show. Worldly women do the same, but the idea of wearing them in token of this headship of man never once enters the mind. If our sisters, then, were to wear bonnets to set forth this headship, who would know it, unless we should teach the world, that our sisters do not wear bonnets for the same purpose for which they are worn by other women? And if we were to teach so, who would believe our report? It is simply preposterous.

Now we close our article without recapitulation, and with it ends the discussion of this question in our columns, until something is discovered that will be of advantage to the brotherhood. But we admonish our brethren and sisters to be united in this time-honored, well-founded, and becoming custom of the churches of God. If the talent and labor, that are wasted in fault finding and unwholesome quibblings, were judiciously employed in the defence and propagation of our holy religion—the religion of Jesus Christ—we would be strength where we are weakness, souls would be won and saved, and God would be glorified. J. W. BEER.

Autumn.

See how fast the leaves are falling,
Trembling, quivering, to the ground.
'Tis the voice of nature, calling
In a solemn, warning sound.

It is autumn. Only a few months have passed since our ears were greeted by the sweet notes of the feathered harbingers of spring. Then our hearts were cheered, and we were delighted with the prospect of mild, sunny days. Soon the forests and fields were robed in vigorous, sprightly green; and all around, in their varied beauty and fragrance, flowers met our admiring vision. God is good. He causes the earth to put on her rich vernal robe, to raise our spirits from the desponding effects of a severe and gloomy winter.

But, how changed! The rich green has well nigh disappeared from the mountains, hills, and vales—from fields and forests; the flowers—the many colored and fragrant flowers—are blighted; and the beautiful spring and summer birds have left us for other climes, and their pleasing notes have died away. Nature has put on a robe of many colors, but their arrangement gives an appearance of sadness. Still we should not despond; for God is ever good, and he has given into our hands very many gifts, to sustain us through the coming sterile days of autumn and winter.

In the foregoing we have a picture of life—of its bright hopes and blighted prospects. "Man that is born of woman, is of few days and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also like a shadow and continueth not." "For we are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow." Thus spake patient Job, who, of his own existence, said, "My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle."

"Youth," it is well said, "is the spring-time of life." Then are our hearts light and cheerful, our spirits joyous, and our prospects bright and promising, our hopes run high, and we are happy. The busy spring-time and the laborious summer of life pass by; and God bestows upon us innumerable and invaluable gifts. These are to fit us for a happy old age, a hopeful death, and a blissful eternity.

The autumn of life steals over us—the decline comes on before we are aware of it. Then come the winter of old age, and the chill of death. Oh, how solemn! Our lives may be spent in usefulness, our peace with God may be made, our calling and election sure; yet there is something solemn,—though sweetly solemn,—in the thought of dying. As we approach a great precipice or cataract with mingled feelings of awe and admiration, so, when we approach the hour of dissolution, when we behold the descending curtain that is to hide us from the scenes of earth, emotions of a solemn character fill our hearts. But if we have filled the design of our benevolent Creator the see motions are mingled with a joyous satisfaction, making this solemnity very sweet. As former generations have passed, so are we passing away. Soon we shall give place to others, our names shall be forgotten and we shall dwell in the land of silence. Those who are most attached to us, will think and speak of us for a short time, and then even they will cease to think of us, except by association. In the land of forgetfulness, long years may roll over our mouldered ashes. But these years of silence shall have an end; for we shall arise. The winter of time shall pass away, and the spring of eternity shall follow. If we now enjoy the blossoms and good fruits in God's earthly garden, then, in the blissful spring-time of the immortal year, we shall hear the songs, not of birds, but of holy angels. Then shall we experience what is now only foreshadowed. This world is beautiful, but that is beauty. The tree of life shall be nourishment, the waters of life refreshment, and the flowers that bloom in the paradise of God are not merely beautiful and fragrant, but they are beauty and fragrance. The atmosphere shall be all peace, and the breezes of the celestial land shall be holy delight. The song of the holy choir shall satisfy the emotions that are only excited here by the best efforts of the most skillful musicians. There shall be no changing seasons there, and "there shall be no night there." There shall be no autumn, with pinching frosts, to mar the beauty of the better land; the flowers shall never fade, the leaves shall never fall, and the fruits shall not decay.

J. W. B.

Editor's Western Tour.

We had expected correspondence from the editor for this number, but from some cause are disappointed. By last accounts they have arrived safely at Waterloo, Iowa. Sister Holsinger was not quite well. We hope she may regain her health and enjoy her visit. We hope, too, to have a lengthy and interesting correspondence from the editor for the next number.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be writ en upon one side of the sheet only.

Important Questions.

Brother Holsinger:

Will you or some other brother answer through the columns of the C. F. C., the following questions:

Is it not contrary to the decisions of our Annual Meeting for the brethren to hold Sunday-school picnics or festivals? And if so, what should be done with brethren who say they are bound to have them, and go on and hold a picnic, after being told that it was contrary to said decisions? We think it about time this worldly conformity receives a scathing rebuke, for we can scarcely tell our young members from the world, either in dress or behavior. I have had brethren to say to me, "It is fashionable to hold Sunday-school picnics; and we must have them too." And if you oppose them they will point the finger of scorn and cry, "Old Fogy." Have the brethren generally come to this that we must fall down to the goddess of fashion? God forbid.

Amos S. Chamberlain.

Notes of Travel.

Started from home to attend several Lovefeasts. Took dinner at Jeremiah Lister's at Humbert, and stayed all night with brother Livengood, near Salisbury, and was well cared for under his kind hospitalities. From there I went to my old home, where I was raised, and tried to preach for them on Saturday at ten o'clock. Tolerable good turnout, and good attention. Brother Ezra Berkley and I went to visit my mother's grave. She was buried Sept 2d, 1831; then went home with brother Garn and took dinner, and spent an hour or so very pleasantly, and then started for my brother-in-law, Jacob Shrock's. Stayed all night, next day, and next night, and a pleasant time we had.

On the 30th day of Sept., I went to and dined with brother Rayman, and saw my niece that I had not seen for a long time. Took dinner there, and spent a few hours very pleasantly. Then I returned to the Berlin lovefeast, where we met with a great many brethren and sisters, and friends. Brother and elder Tobias Meyers officiated. Brother Blough informed me that 230 sisters communed, and that many brethren, if not more. After meeting went with brother John Myers, near the meeting-house, and stayed all night. Next morning took breakfast at the meeting-house. Went with Tobias Myers to the poor house and visited the sick, and was treated kindly by the steward of the house. Thence to Somerset, and spent the night with brother Meyers again, and had a pleasant time under their kind hospitality.

Next morning, the 2d day of October, went to the lovefeast at Middle Creek. Large congregation. Brother Tobias Blough officiated. He is from Qui Mahoning congregation. After meeting I went to brother Jacob L. Miller's, and stayed all night. In the morning went back to the meeting-house and took breakfast. We had good order during services in the house: the best I ever saw there.

From there I started for the Indian Creek meeting-house. Stayed with brother Frederick Murray all night. Spent the night pleasantly. The next morning started for the meeting house. Preaching at ten o'clock. Good attention. After dinner was over, there were two received into the church by baptism. Evening services at half past four o'clock. A full house, and the conduct was not praiseworthy with the outsiders; otherwise we had a very good meeting. Tobias Meyers officiated at the meeting, assisted by Josiah Berkley and Felty Blough from Middle Creek congregation, Ephraim Cober from Berlin congregation, Abram Summy, from Jacob's Creek, and Elder Adam Snyder from Middle Creek. The church seems to be in a prospering state. Home with brother Daniel Meyers. Took breakfast there. Met some of my old acquaintances that I had not seen for thirty years. From there to the meeting-house. Preaching at ten o'clock; a full house, good attention. After preaching went with brother Henry Felger and took dinner and enjoyed myself happily while there.

Left there at half past three o'clock, accompanied by brother William and sister Murray, to Springfield. On my way I was informed that we would pass by the home of sister Martha Davis, and the elder sister of brother Jacob Murray, deceased, and had a very pleasant time. I learned that they wanted preaching there by the brethren. For this I will answer hereafter. Landed at brother Murray's, in Springfield, at six o'clock. Was informed that the Methodists were holding their quarterly meeting; and brother Murray and I went up to the place of preaching. We learned something new.

The minister took his text in Ecclesiastes—"What thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." He made a great oration. One comparison I must mention: "There was a certain highway. On that road there was a place where the road forked. All ministers that traveled on that road would take the wrong road, and come to the same place they started from, and so they had gained nothing. So another started out and was determined to get to the place of the appointment. On his way there he came to where there was a family living, and his faith failed him. He concluded he would inquire of the woman, of his whereabouts. She told him of this road; and that when he came to the place where the road forked, he should meditate, and whichever way the spirit directed him, he should go. He did so, and happened to come to the right place. And he advised his friends, saying, wherever the Spirit led them they should pursue with all their might." But he never once warned his hearers to "try the spirit," lest it might lead them to destruction. His whole discourse was intended to show that, whatever way a man would choose, he would come out right. O, brethren, sisters, and friends, let us try the spirits, whether they be of God. Let this suffice for the present.

I lodged at brother William Murray's, and was well cared for. I pray the Lord to reward them, and all I was with, for their hospitality and kindness.

Next morning started for home, where I arrived about sundown. Found all well. Thank be to the Lord for his loving kindness.

Jacob Beeghly.

Somerfield, Pa.

My dear brethren and sisters; I have been much grieved since our last Yearly Meeting, while reading the Companion. There is too much fault found against the counsels our dear brethren have tried to give us out of love, and we hope they were guided by the Holy Spirit. If so, we do not only speak against our brethren, but also against the Holy Ghost. Were it not for our Yearly Meetings our Brotherhood would not long hold together; but there would be many different orders. Let us not speak evil of one another. I once heard a very worthy old brother say, "If we have nothing good to say about each other, we had better be still and say nothing." Let us be careful and love each other fervently, for if we truly love one, we are not apt to speak evil of him. Love is the principal part of religion. Love is charity, and without charity, we are told by the apostle we are nothing. Would to God we possessed more of that Christian love. We would then get along much better in this world, and it would prepare us for heaven. Oh! it is a very weighty matter to appear before the judgment seat of Christ, and give an account of all our doings. Who shall be able to stand? When I carefully examine myself, I almost lose my hope; but what shall I do? If I give up I know I will be lost. So I will form a new resolution to live a little nearer my God; pray him to guide me with his Holy Spirit. Oh! let us pray for one another, so that we may all work out our soul's salvation with fear and trembling, is my prayer.

E. S.

Brookville, Md.

Brother Holsinger and all the brethren and sisters, greeting: "Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ." As some time has passed since I addressed you through the medium of the press, and it is through the kind providence of God that I am still spared, and have the privilege of reading the COMPANION, I take it upon myself this good Sabbath morning to communicate a few lines for its precious columns. I feel as though I ought to write something about our good communion meeting, which closed one week ago, being on the 20th and 21st of September, at the house of brother Henry Bashor, (my father's). There was a number of brethren, sisters, and friends from adjoining counties. The speakers were Elders A. J. Correll, from Holt Co., and Samuel Blocher of DeKalb Co., and D. D. Sell and Daniel B. Gibson of Clinton county. Truly we had a feast of good things. I don't know that I ever heard better preaching than we had on Saturday night. There was a large crowd of spectators present; and it was a great curiosity for the most of them, as it was the first meeting of the kind that was ever held in this neighborhood. The majority of the congregation seemed to be interested; but there always are some that go to such places for amusement. But the time will come, when "every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess," &c.

There was one baptized during the meeting. It was also a great sight, for some, to see our way of baptizing. On Sunday morning the funeral of brother Benjamin Bashor's little boy was preached by elders Correll and Sell. There were many tears shed on the occasion; and we hope there were lasting impressions made on the minds of many fathers and mothers, that were present, who have lost their precious little ones in this life. May they set a new resolution, and come out from among the world, and prepare to meet their dear ones that have gone before to a better world than this. We know that, when they die in their infancy, they are far better off than here; and we also know that preaching funeral's is not to benefit the dead, but the living; and we trust all that were present were benefited by that funeral discourse.

I will yet say, that I think all the members of this arm of the church enjoyed the meeting. I can say for myself I enjoyed it well, except one thing, and that was the absence of one that is dear to me, and whom I greatly desired to be present; but it could not be. I hope and trust the good Lord will yet spare his life, until he has made his peace with Him. "For this I hope and for this I pray." The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.

LOUISA J. WILLIAMS.

Whitesville, Mo.

Sabbath-Schools.

There is much said for and against Sabbath-Schools, so I will do for it what I can. I have often wondered why so many are against it. If it does not succeed so well the first season, we shall not look for the fruits too soon. If all would try to help us much as they could, how much better it would be. But some parents are afraid to take a part, and they do not even allow their children to go; and this is a great hindrance.

The Annual Conference has granted it; and we promised to submit to it, and now do not. This is putting ourselves into a dangerous position. There is much written about Sabbath-schools, but no scripture has been brought against it. Scripture is what we want; and not what that able speaker says or writes. One says he can't find "Thus saith the Lord" for it; neither did he find "Thus saith he not." St. Mark 6: 2, "And when the Sabbath day was come, he began to preach in the synagogue, and many hearing him were astonished," etc. Is not Sabbath-school teaching in the synagogue? That is what we are trying to do. We will not give up yet, but ever ask Jesus to stand by us in whatever we do. I wish all to attend Sabbath school, to read the Holy Scriptures, and learn to love Jesus. We may perhaps thereby gain one soul, which is worth more than the whole world.

LYDIA ANGLEMYER.

Locke, Ind.

Fine, Costly Houses and Barns.

EDITORS OF THE COMPANION.—Dear Brethren.—You will probably think it strange, that I once more resume my pen to write you a line for the C. F. C. My only apology for writing now, or rather for not writing before, is, that I have not been taking your paper for the past year, and that, I was part of the time unable to write. My present object in writing is, to expose error and vindicate truth; or endeavor to bring light out of darkness.

In current volume of C. F. C., page 510, I find an article over the signature of Elias K. Buechly, headed "Queries Answered." The query is, "Is it consistent with the gospel of Christ, for brethren, and especially ministering brethren, to build fine, costly houses and barns?" The querist seems especially to desire an answer by brother H. D. Davy. Brother Beuchly takes it upon himself to answer the query; and as his answer fails to satisfy my mind, and, as I believe, also the mind of the querist, I take this opportunity of calling him back to a review of his article. I do so, from the fact that I think he has clearly evaded the spirit and meaning of the query, by getting into fine technicalities.

I have introduced the word fine in an emphatic manner, in the above sentence, as a qualifying adjective, in order to see whether the brother would not understand its import, in this particular case, at least, to be something different from merely finishing anything.

The brother first takes up the word "fine" and disposes of it by giving finished as its primary meaning, according to the definition given of the word.

Now I have no objection whatever, to the definition given to the word, for that is one of its meanings, but I have a very serious objection to the advantage he takes of this one meaning, to evade the force of the brother's query. If brother Beuchley has only one idea in his mind associated with the word fine, and that one idea, the completion, or finishing of any fabric, no matter in what style it may be done, then in that case he is certainly excusable in giving the answer which he has to the query; and consequently we hope that our efforts will not be in vain to him, in assisting in the enlargement of his ideas upon the subject.

I now purpose to ask brother Beuchly a few questions, which I hope he will not consider impertinent or offensive. When we speak of the fine arts, do we simply understand, the art of finishing a job, as making rails, clapboards, bricks, chairs, &c., which are articles of usefulness? or do we mean something fanciful and gorgeous in appearance, and which is mainly for the gratifying of the "lust of the eye and the pride of life?"

It is very apparent to all, that the word fine, when employed as a qualifying adjective, is susceptible of various meanings; as, when we say of a person, "He is a fine man," or "She is a fine woman." Thus used, we simply mean that they are good people; but when we say, "He is a fine gentleman," or "She is a fine lady," we mean to convey the idea, that they are rather on the stylish order, and gaudy in appearance. When we speak of a garment as being fine, we have no allusion to the texture of the material; but when we speak of cloth or thread as being fine, we mean that it is fine in texture.

When we read of the rich man in the parable, "who was clothed in purple and fine linen," we understand the word fine to describe the texture of the cloth, and the word purple, to denote the gorgeous appearance. When we read in the Psalms of David: "The commandments of the Lord are pure, enlightening the eyes, and are more to be desired than gold, yea, than much fine gold," we understand that the value of the thing is under consideration, without regard to finish or texture.

But not to be farther tedious, as I think the examples given are amply sufficient to show the point at issue, I will proceed to the examination of the next word—"costly." This word, the brother passes rather lightly, simply remarking, that "to build a good, comfortable house or barn, will certainly be more or less costly." Here, again, I think the brother has failed to come up to the point, according to the expectation of the querist. The query is, "Fine, costly houses and barns." I have already shown, while treating upon the word fine, that the proper meaning of the word depends entirely upon the nature of the thing to which it is antecedent; and so with the word costly, which is also an adjective. I will here give a few examples:

A man buys a pen-knife for three dollars. We say it is costly, and bordering on extravagance. Another buys a fine family Bible at twenty dollars. We again say it is a very costly Bible, and are apt to accuse him of extravagance. But another buys a fine horse at one hundred dollars. We say, he is a very cheap horse. But he sells him to a neighbor for five hundred dollars. We then pronounce him a costly horse.

A man builds a good, comfortable, convenient, commodious barn, at a cost of one thousand dollars. We say it is a good, cheap barn. But as riches increase he gets in the condition of the foolish rich man of scripture notoriety: he has not where to store his goods, and he says, "I will pull down my barns and build greater ones." So he builds a barn at a cost of five thousand dollars. We say, "Superfluity and extravagance."

Now this is not an overdrawn picture; because there are brethren,—or those who call themselves brethren,—now live in various portions of the United States, whose barns cost not less than five thousand dollars, and some probably double that amount; while their dwelling houses are almost like princely mansions. They are living in all the luxury and splendor that human heart can desire; while there are poor, honest, hard working brethren and neighbors, living in the immediate vicinity, in far worse houses than the meanest stable on their farms. Here are the poor, repining in poverty, their children growing up in ignorance, probably not a book to read, if they should (through the philanthropy of the commonwealth, in the establishment of a common free-school system,) have gotten sufficient education to be able to read. And probably they are not able to take the COMPANION, or any other religious paper; while their brethren, living hard by, are spending hundreds of dollars in ornamenting, or if you would rather have it, in finishing off a fine, costly barn. But this is not all: hundreds, yea thousands and tens of thousands are destitute of the preaching of the word, as the brethren say, "in its purity.

Now brethren, if we believe the doctrine we preach, could we not employ our spare money to a much nobler purpose than expending it in building fine, costly houses and barns? If God has blessed us with an abundance for our natural wants, and something over, let us be careful that we do not employ it for the gratifying of our own lusts.

(To be continued.)

Annual Meeting for 1873.
Report of Finance Committee.

Moneys received from the churches.

Elklick,	$160.07
Keim & Livengood, mostly from Elklick,	119.47
Berlin,	221.75
Shade,	48 75
Quemahoning,	65.00
Conemaugh,	57.60
Cowanshannock,	19.25
Duncansville,	23 00
Montgomery,	1.50
Manor,	13.37
Indian Creek,	28.75
Clarion,	26.00
Middle Creek,	136.00
Jacob's Creek,	44.75
George's Creek,	173.00
Ten Mile,	10.00
From sale of tent lumber, &c.,	320.62
Other sources,	4.44
Total,	1775.77
Amount paid out by Treasurer	$1819.95
Amount due Treasurer	44.19
Expenses of A. M., about	$3000 00
Received from churches,	1775.77
Western District Pa., Dr.,	$1224 23

Finance Committee,
Per S. D. LIVENGOOD.

REMARKS.—It will be seen from the above report, that the Western District of Pennsylvania is in arrears over twelve hundred dollars. It will also be seen that some of the congregations (see Elk Lick) have paid the full quota of $1.50 per member, according to the demand made. Now what shall be done? The remainder must be collected, or the Western District pronounced insolvent. This ought not so to be, when the true avails of the weakest congregation of the District is, perhaps, not less than twenty times as much as the entire expenses of the A. M., and some of the wealthier congregations can count their millions. The report will show where the money should be raised, but it will be thankfully received from any source. Remit to S. D. Livengood, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa.

J. W. B.

Query.

Is it right for the sisters to judge in the church; in church council? Is it in accordance with 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35; 1 Tim. 2: 10, 11, 12, 13, 14? I wish some old brother to give an answer. R. H. WHITCHER.

Pittsburgh, Ind.

Annual Meeting Tent.

EDITOR C. F. C., please say to the Brotherhood, that the purchasing of a tent is a failure for the present. The proposed donations amount only to about four hundred dollars. Only thirty-four churches, out of the many, reported as having considered the matter.

DANIEL VANIMAN.

Virden, Ill.

Announcements.

The lovefeast in the Elklick branch, Somerset county, Pa., will be, the Lord willing, on Saturday, the 25th of this month, commencing at 3 o'clock p. m. and to continue over Lord's day.

C. G. LINT.

LOVE-FEASTS.

Bachelor Run, Carroll Co., Ind., Oct. 25.

Beaver Dam, Md., Oct. 25.

Dry Creek, Linn county, Iowa, Nov. 1, and 2.

Six miles west of Cussics station, Merced county, Cal.

Salomony Arm, Huntington, Ind., Oct. 28.

Buffalo, Valley, Union county, Pa., Oct 30.

Fairview, Appanoose county, Iowa, Oct. 31.

MARRIED.

On the 2nd of October, at the residence of Francis Pike, by the undersigned, Mr. Simon Myers, and Miss Mary E. Nalley, both of Washington township, Polk county, Iowa. May peace and happiness attend their happy union.

D. E. BRUBAKER.

By the undersigned on the 2nd of October, Mr. Montgomery Scott, formerly of California, and Miss Sarah Berkley, of Westmoreland county, Pa.

D. D. HORNER.

By the undersigned, August 3rd, brother E. M. Williams and Miss Mary E. Palmer, of Merced county, Mo.

DANIEL EVANS.

By the undersigned, at his residence, Oct. 1st, Mr. James Edwards of Rayne township, and Miss Catharine Ober, daughter of Elder David Ober, of Cherry Hill township, Indiana county, Pa.

JOSEPH HOLSOPPLE.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Conemaugh branch, Cambria Co., Pa., John Shaffer, son of brother Levi Shaffer, aged 3 years 4 months and 25 days. Funeral services by the brethren, from Matth. 18: 3.

Also in the same congregation, infant daughter of friends Wesley and Susan Gosserd, aged 1 year 1 month and 20 days. Funeral services by the writer.

JOS. S. BURKHART.

In the Indian Creek branch, Westmoreland county, Pa., on the 15th of August, friend Mary Snyder, aged 72 years 10 months and 15 days. Disease, palsy. She was a member of the Methodist church. Funeral discourse by the writer, from Heb. 9: 27, 28.

Also in the same congregation, Daniel Fisher, son of brother Adam and sister—— Fisher, aged 21 years 1 month and 15 days. Disease, fever. Funeral discourse from (book not given,) 11: 35.

D. D. HORNER.

Departed this life, August 30th, at the Union Tannery, Juniata county, Pa., Mrs. Sue M. Bartley, wife of Samuel B. Bartley, daughter of friend Samuel and sister Sarah Stem, aged 30 years 3 months and 12 days. She leaves a kind husband and three children to mourn their loss. The deceased was a pious member of the Presbyterian church. She was beloved by all who knew her. Her loss we deeply mourn; but "the Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord!" Oh, how hard it is to part with such a loved one!

S. STEM.

In the Manor congregation, Cambria county, Pa., Sept. 11th, Lula May Zigler, infant daughter of brother Abraham and sister Sarah Zigler, aged one year 1 month and 23 days. Disease, Cholera Infantum. Funeral services by the brethren, Elder Samuel and Daniel Brallier, from Luke 18: 15, —31. May the Lord comfort and strengthen those bereaved parents, that they may live faithful until death, so that they can again meet their dear little one in the eternal world, where pain, sickness, sorrow, and separation are known no more.

In the Lower Deer Creek arm of the church, Carroll county, Indiana, September 21st, Ira Young, son of brother Reuben (deceased) and sister Fannie Young, aged 6 years and 29 days. Thus in the short space of about six months, our loving sister has been bereaved of a kind husband and a darling little son. No doubt she feels the loss of them very much, but she need not sorrow as those who have no hope. If she lives faithful until death, she can again meet them in the eternal world, where sorrow and separation are known no more.

J. D. MISSELMAN.

In Grayson county, Texas, Floelly Wertz, daughter of brother Philip and sister Barbara Wertz, aged 7 years and 9 months. Blessed are the dead in the Lord. Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

T. B. CANANT.

In Middle Fork congregation, Clinton Co., Ind., Sept. 18th, our much loved sister Lydia Skiles, wife of brother John Skiles; aged 65 years 8 months and 13 days. Lived with her husband 47 years less 4 days, and had been a faithful member of the church 45 years and 25 days; had 8 children, 40 grandchildren, and 2 great-grandchildren. The loss of our departed sister is sensibly felt by all who knew her. She was a trusty mother in Israel, always ready and willing to administer to the needy. To say the least, in her death the church has lost a faithful and lively member, the afflicted neighbors and friends an often visitor, the children a cheerful mother, and the husband an affectionate wife. Funeral services by Elders I. Billheimer and L. Cripe.

J. D. NEHR.

In the Tuscarawas congregation, Ohio, of remitting fever, Sept. 24th, Martha Lurella Cogan, daughter of S. and M. A. Cogan, aged 2 years 3 months and 23 day.

GEO. V. KOLLAR.

LIST OF MONEYS RECEIVED for SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS, etc.,

D B Teeter	2 50	H Ritter (per Henry Baughman)	1 50
Samuel Wise	1 25
J H Shook	14 5[illegible]

WE will admit a limited number of select advertisements at the following rates
One insertion, 20 cents a line.
Each subsequent insertion 15 cents a line.
Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.
No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations

TRAPERS, &c.

How to trap, and fish, and tan furs. All for 50 cents. Address
WILLIAM DAILY.
Nimlesilla,
9: 41—5[illegible]. Summit Co., Ohio.

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.
EDW'D J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen,
YORK, PA

THE "SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS.

Manufactured by E. P. Needham & Son. 143, 145 & 147 East 23d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passenger Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:

MT. DALLAS ACCOM., at 7: 50 A. M.
HUNTINGDON EXPRESS at 2: 55 P. M.

RETURNING.

EXPRESS, leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.

ACCOMMODATION, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. in time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c

W. H. BROWN, Supt.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE
By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.

This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works. "NIGHT SCENES," and "OUR FATHER'S HOUSE," nearly 100,000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. ZEIBER & M'CURDY, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,
J. H. MOORE,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

Farm For Sale.

Guardian sale of 119 acres of choice land. Will be sold at public sale Tuesday, Sept. 23d, 1873. Well located, well watered, good improvements, bank barn, brick house, with all the necessary outbuildings; situated only 5 miles from good market; located in the western part of Milton Township, about midway between Smithville on the south and Pike Station on the A. & G. W. R. R., in Wayne county, Ohio, known as the Pinkerton farm. DAVID LITTLE.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2.50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARICE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-tf.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary Word-for-word English Translation. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. WILLIAM AIKMAN, D. D. $1.50.

Man, in Genesis and in Geology; or the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. WELLS. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporaneous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Aims and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By GEORGE COMBE. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structure and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by Trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political Journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid, 0.75
5 copies, post paid, 3.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid, 0.75
5 copies, post paid, 3.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid, 1.00
Per dozen, 11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid, 1.00
Per dozen 10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid, 1.25
Per dozen " " 13.30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid, .50
Per dozen " " 5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodesia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 50 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00, postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 00, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1 25 per copy, postpaid, or $10.00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid, $2.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid, 2.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid, $1.00
Sheep Strong Binding, 1.25

32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION. 25

BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA. $1.70

Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Meomaw, prepaid, .75

Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid, .75
12 copies, by Express. 7.00

Pious Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid, .45
Browns Pocket Concordance, .60
German & English Testaments, .75
NEAD'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid, 1.45
" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid 1.40
COMPANION Volume 3, bound post paid, $2.7
Reserved at the office, 2.25
HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue. 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco To ministers on Tobacco. Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63, Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interest.

258 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,

431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

Will fill orders for Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or PANACEA West of Ohio.

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.

Waynesboro, Franklin Co. Pa.

Will control the Eastern and Southern States. All letters should be carefully directed as above, and letters containing money must be registered.

This year was more favorable for curing herbs than any other for ten years, the medicine is therefore warrented perfect.

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, OCT. 28, 1873. NUMBER 43.

The Beautiful Gate.

Lord, open the door, for I falter;
I faint in this stifled air,
In dust and straitness I lose my breath;
This life of self is a living death:
Let me into thy pastures broad and fair,
To the sun and the wind from thy mountains free;
Lord, open the door to me!

There is a holier life, and truer
Than ever my heart has found;
There is a nobler work than is wrought—within
These walls so charred by the fires of sin,
Where I toil like a captive blind and bound:—
An open door to a freer task
In Thy nearer smile I ask.

Yet the world is Thy field, Thy garden;
On earth art Thou still at home;
When thou bendest hither Thy hallowing eye,
My narrow work-room seems vast and high,
Its dingy ceiling—a rainbow dome;
Stand ever thus by my narrow door,
And toil will be toil—no more.

Through the rosy portals of morning,
Now the tides of sunshine flow
Over the earth and the glistening sea,
The praise Thou inspirest rolls back to Thee.
Its tones through the infinite arches go;
Yet crippled and dumb behold me wait,
Dear Lord! at the beautiful gate.

For the COMPANION.

"Let us Walk in the Old Paths."

"Thus saith the Lord: Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, we will not walk therein." Jer. 6: 16.

Having read the COMPANION for about two years, I have become convinced that there is an element in the church that is drawing away from the "old paths;" and it seems, to some extent, that, when such brethren and sisters are counselled, or in other words, rebuked in patience with all long suffering, they will not hearken, but in return will contend that it is prejudice or superstition, in brethren who will stand firm to the "old paths" which are in accordance with the gospel.

Now we will be as brief as possible, and give a few hints at such things as indicate a drawing away from the "old paths."

One thing is, a favoring of brethren being elected to the offices of the nation under whose laws we are living. This is certainly a drawing away from the "old paths," and conflicts with the spirit of the gospel; for the spirit of Christ teaches us, all through the gospel, to abstain from the appearence of evil. The Church is the ground and the pillar of the truth. So they understood it at the beginning, and so the true followers understand it yet. It is better to abide in the kingdom of light than to mix in with the kingdom of this world.

It is also said, by a certain brother, that brethren should use more charity; so much so as to hide mourner's bench religion—a tradition instituted by whom? I answer.by man. Does reason itself teach us that we should leave the word of the Lord and serve an invention gotten up by man? No, the word of the Lord forbids it; for that word, in short tells us that we should neither add to nor take from. Then how can charity hide such a man-made idol as mourner's bench religion? This,then, being the case, there would be danger in persisting in such a course, for we would soon get out of the "old paths." Charity is good, and very profitable when applied as the gospel directs.

And again; we hear some few denouncing the proceedings of our Annual Meeting; some taking up each query and answer, and passing their judgment upon them against the decision of those assembled in General Council, adding, that the more weightier matters of the law are passed by. To such I would say,keep in the "old paths," for it is better to hearken than to institute new paths. Let this suffice; and let us all, both old and young, labor zealously to keep in the "old paths," and hearken unto the Lord. If we love Jesus, we will keep his commandments.

Yours in the spirit of love.

A. S. CUP.

UNLESS the people can be kept in total darkness, it is the wisest way for the advocates of truth to give them full light.—Whately.

For the COMPANION.

Who is Able to Stand?

"Who is able to stand before this Holy Lord God?" 1 Samuel, 6:20.

God is essentially, infinitely and eternally holy; and his holiness influences him, and appears in all he does. His holy eye observes the least violation of his law; his holy heart loathes all impurity; his holy law condemns every transgression; his holy arm will punish every offender; and his holy covenant saves myriads of immortal beings from their sins. The Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works. His holiness makes him a consuming fire to sinners, and produces the question, "Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God?" Not the formal professor, the presumptuous pretender, the proud legalist, or the unsanctified church member—these will not be able to stand. But only those who now fall at his feet in penitence, flee to Jesus as the refuge for the guilty, trust in his glorious atonement for peace, rely on his precious promises for support, plead at his throne of grace for daily supplies, are clothed in his righteousness, united to his person, and lovingly look for his appearing. Sinner! you must appear before this holy Lord God: how will you be able to stand? Reader! whoever you are, examine into your state; be wise in time nor rest without good ground to conclude that you will be able to stand. Believer! see to it that your evidences are bright, that your preparations are complete, and that you have no just cause for fear. Set the foot on the Rock of Ages, obtain grace to sanctify your soul, and trust in Jesus alone; so shall you be able to stand. Oh! my soul, see to it, that in that great, and terrible day, the day of wrath, thou wilt be safe. Ponder the question, "The great day of his wrath is come, and who will be able to stand?" "Thou, even thou art to be feared; and who may stand in thy sight when once thou art angry?" Ps. 76: 7.

C. BOWERS.

Lake, Ohio.

Invitations.

Do you know why more men do not come to Christ? It is because men are not invited that they do not come. You get a general invitation from your friend: "Come around some time to my house and dine with me." You do not go. But he says, "Come around to-day at four o'clock, and we'll dine together." And you say, "I don't know as I have any engagement: I will come." "I expect you at four o'clock." And you go. The world feels it is a general invitation to come around some time and sit at the great gospel feast, and men do not come because they are not specially invited. It is because you do not take hold of them and say, "My brother, come to Christ, come now, come now!" How was it that in the days of Daniel Baker and Truman, Osborne, and Nettleton, so many thousands came to Jesus? Because those men did nothing else but invite them to come. They spent their lifetime uttering invitations, and they did not mince matters either. Where did John Bunyan's pilgrim start from? Did he start from some easy, quiet, cosy place? No; if you have read John Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, you know where he started from, and that was the City of Destruction, where every sinner starts from. Do you know what Livingston, the Scotch minister, was preaching about in Scotland when three hundred souls under one sermon came to Christ? He was preaching about the human heart as unclean, and hard, and stony. Do you know what George Whitefield was preaching about in his first sermon, when fifteen souls saw the salvation of God? It was this: "Ye must be born again." Do you know what is the last subject he ever preached upon? "Flee from the wrath to come." Oh! that the Lord God would come into our pulpits, and prayer-meetings, and Christian circles, and bring from us our fine rhetoric and profound metaphysics and our elegant hair splitting, to the old-fashioned well of gospel invitation.—Talmage.

The Compassion of Jesus.

What a pattern to his people, the tender compassion of Jesus! He found the world he came to save, a moral Bethesda. The wail of suffering humanity was everywhere borne to his ear. It was his delight to walk its porches to pity, relieve, comfort, save. The faintest cry of misery arrested his footsteps—stirred a ripple in this fountain of infinite love. Was it a leper—that dreaded name which entailed a life-long exile from friendly looks and kindly words? there was one at least, who had tones and deeds of tenderness for the outcast. "Jesus, being moved with compassion, put forth his hand and touched him." Was it some blind beggar on the Jericho highway, groping in darkness, pleading for help? "Jesus stood still, and had compassion on them and touched their eyes." Was it the speechless pleading of a widow's tears at the gate of Nain, where she followed her earthly pride and prop to the grave? "When the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her, and said, weep not!" Even when he rebukes, the bow of compassion is seen in the cloud, or, rather, that cloud, as it passes, dissolves in a rain-shower of mercy. He pronounces Jerusalem "desolate," but the doom is uttered amid a flood of anguished sorrow.

Reader, do the compassionate words and deeds of a tender Savior find any feeble echo and transcript in yours? As you traverse, in thought, the waste of human wretchedness, does the spectacle give rise, not to the mere emotional feeling which weeps itself away in sentimental tears, but to an earnest desire to do something to mitigate the suffering of woe-worn humanity? How vast and world-wide the claim on our compassion! now near, now at a distance; the unmet and unanswered cry of perishing millions abroad, the heathendom that lies unsuccored at your own door, the public charity languishing, the mission staff dwarfed and crippled for lack of needful funds, a suffering district, a starving family, a poor neighbor, a helpless orphan; it may be, some crowded hovel, where misery and vice run riot, or some lonely sick chamber, where the dim lamp has been wasting for dreary nights, or some desolate home which death has entered, where "Joseph is not, and Simeon is not," and where some sobbing heart, under the tattered garb of poverty, mourns, unsolaced and unpitied, its "loved and lost." Are there none such within your reach, to whom a trifling pittance would be an angel of mercy? How it would hallow and enhance all you possess, were you to seek to live as almoner of Jehovah's bounties. If he has given you this world's substance, remember, it is bestowed not to be greedily hoarded or lavishly squandered. Property and wealth are talents to be traded and laid out for the good of others—sacred trusts, not selfishly to be enjoyed, but generously to be employed.

"The poor are the representatives of Jesus, their wants he considers his own," and will recompense accordingly. The feeblest expression of Christian pity and love, though it be but a widow's mite, or a cup of cold water, or the kindly look and word when there is neither mite nor cup to give, yet, if done in his name, it is entered in the "Book of Life" as a "loan to the Lord;" and in that day when "books are opened," the loan will be paid back with usury.—Bonar.

Principle and Prejudice.

Principle is to be distinguished from prejudice. The man who should endeavor to weaken my belief of the truth of the Bible, and of the fair deductions from it of the leading doctrines of religion, under the notion of there being prejudices, should be regarded by me as an assassin. He stabs me in my deepest hope; he robs me of my solid happiness; and he has no equivalent to offer. This species of the truth and value of scripture is within the reach of all men. It is my strongest. It assures me, as fully as a voice could from heaven, that my principles are not prejudices. I see in the Bible my heart and the world painted to the life; and I see just that provision made which is competent to the highest ends and effects on this heart and this world.—Cecil.

If we would become heavenly-minded, we must let the imagination realize the blessedness to which we are moving on. Let it calm you and ennoble you, and give you cheerfulness to endure. Let us think much of rest, the rest which is not of indolence, but of powers in perfect equilibrium; the rest which is deep as summer midnight, yet full of life and force as summer sunshine, the Sabbath of eternity.—Robertson.

All endeavors aspire to eminency: all eminencies do beget an admiration. And this makes me believe that contemplative admiration is a large part of the worship of the Deity. Nothing can carry us so near to God and heaven as this. The mind can walk beyond the sight of the eye; and (though in a cloud) can lift us into heaven while we live. Meditation is the soul's perspective glass, whereby, in her long remove, she discerneth God, as if he were nearer at hand.—Owen Feltham.

The Blessedness of Giving.

It is one of the sayings of our Lord, recorded by no evangelist, but quoted by Paul in his speech at Miletus, and thus preserved and handed down to us: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Unquestionably, the saying has its chief significance in the moral and spiritual influence of giving on the giver. A gift is often of great value to the receiver. Many times it brings light into the home of darkness, relief to the desponding and lifts a heavy burden from the crushed heart. But a richer blessing is sent back on the giver. If from a Christian motive he has reached forth his hand with pecuniary aid, that hand brings back what is more priceless than gold. In this way, then, and in this way only, can accumulated wealth become the means of moral and spiritual good to its possessor.

If these words of Jesus are true—and all experience confirms their truth—then should the rich give while they live. Testamentary legacies are well. They benefit the receivers. They help the causes to which they are devoted. But the giver suffers an immense loss. None of the blessedness of giving comes to him. He is sleeping in his grave—has passed beyond the discipline of earthly acts—before his wealth is distributed. The luxury and the spiritual benefit, the enlargement of soul and the increase of human sympathy, that come from deeds of noble generosity are not his. He is not the cheerful giver whom God loves. He holds on to his wealth with a grasp that only death can loosen.

Here, for instance, is a man advanced in life, who has fifty thousand dollars to give to charitable objects. He knows he can have but a few months longer to live. He is considering what disposition he can make of this sum. Shall he distribute it now, or shall he give it by will after his death?

If by will, he has the pleasure of retaining it in his own hands till death, and thus gratify that love of possession which is inherent. And, besides, the money will do as much good ten years hence as now. The needs will be as great then as they are to-day. Foreign missions, home missions, the cause of education, all the great causes of Christian benevolence, will be as imperatively demanding help. Why then, not distribute these fifty thousand dollars by testamentary legacies? Because the blessedness of giving is thus, in a great measure, lost. And the loss is a great one. The money does its blessed work for others, not for him. He deliberately throws away the means of great moral and spiritual benefit to himself, or rather barters them for the selfish gratification of the love of possession. Wisdom then dictates,, a regard for his own highest good dictates, that the man supposed should look around him, select the objects to which he will devote his money, and with his own hands distribute his fifty thousand dollars—every one of which will send back a more than compensating good.—Watchman and Reflector.

For the COMPANION.

Christian Uniform.

In the C. F. C., page 570, is a lengthy article headed "Christian Uniform," by Levi Andes, with which I cannot fully agree. Brother A. in that article says, "There is far more talked of Christian Union than Christian Uniform." He appears to have no heart in this much talked of "Christian Union;" and instead of working, yes, wishing, hoping and praying with God's people, for that great and happy end, he would rather show his zeal in the cause of a Christian Uniform, which, according to his language, consists of a "broad-brimmed hat, and a shad-belly coat." I presume he intends that only for the male uniform, the female standard he omitted. Our periodicals are being filled with this uniform question, either directly or indirectly. Pretty much the same with our preaching, no matter what the text is, it must come out in a dress parade. And if brother A. is opposed to Christian Union, then let him help to urge this uniform question; it has helped to divide other denominations and it may help to divide us.

Is it a wonder that outsiders call us formalists, and think that we want to cut out Christians with a pair of shears? or that we show a greater concern for the shell than for the kernel, if they judge us by our papers, as more is said upon dress than any command in the Bible? Occasionally a lecture on the foolish and useless fashions, would be perfectly in order, and every sensible man would appreciate it, provided we would sometimes give a hint on the other extreme, namely, indecency, impropriety, filthiness, uncleanliness, and slovenly carelessness.

Brother A. thinks, like many other brethren, that the dress is the "sign," or advertisement of what is within; or, to make it still stronger, they call it the fruit of the tree. Suppose we admit that a plain, common, neat dress, such as our plain neighbors wear, (I ask no more,) is a sign of pride, then by what sign do we know slovenliness, stinginess, covetousness, avarice or hypocrisy? Could not a cheap, ill-shaped, careless, homely or slovenly dress be taken as a "sign" for one or all of the above violations? Yes, and even more; a man with a slovenly, slouchy uniform may be proud like the Pharisee, and thank God that he is not like other people.

Now brethren, you judge us, (which is positively forbidden,) by a sign that you say stands for pride; yet a brother may wear a sign that may indicate a more sinful nature in several ways, to say nothing of the damper and effect it has upon the church and the great cause.

Show me a man that is "greedy of filthy lucre," covetous, miserly, stingy, a lover of the "root of all evil,"—money, one who would not give a dime willingly to any benevolent cause, or even for the spreading of the gospel, for the support of the church, or a poor and needy minister, one who watches close, and sees many faults in others, then I will show you a man that wears a cheap and humble attire.

Dear brethren and sisters, do not understand me to say, that a cheap and humble attire is always a sign for one or more of the above mentioned evils. O no, I am not a seeker after signs; I am only trying to hold up both sides of the picture. According to an old adage, "It is a poor rule that does not work both ways." But this rule appears to work but one way. There appears to be no law against the filthy sloven, who wears perhaps the sign of covetousness, hypocrisy, etc. He can bring a member to an account, can sit in judgment, yes, even help to excommunicate and hold him as a heathen, simply because he has dressed like other and even plain people around him, which is interpreted, sign of pride. Oh! when will we stop and think?

Why not speak, write, and make ordinances against the other extreme, indecency? Why not occasionally quote passages like the following: "Let all things be done decently and in order," 1 Cor. 14: 40; "Wherefore lay apart all filthiness," James 1: 21; "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh"? 2 Cor. 7: 1.

A brother can fault me for not conforming to the order of the Brethren, for not wearing the "uniform" and my hair properly; in short, he can tell me how to comb, but I have no appeal if he does not comb at all. Oh! in the language of Samuel, "Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon."

Do not understand me to find fault with an humble dress, not even the uniform. God forbid! But I do deny the right of making a "uniform" a church ordinance. I hope to meet many plain uniformed brethren and sisters in heaven, when they will come with robes made white in the blood of the Lamb, with palms of victory in their hands, and crowns of glory upon their heads, to walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem.

Let the flirt and the sloven be held up alike, the one is despised and the other abominable. We are in danger of forcing the people to the conclusion, that we are opposed to everthing that is nice and beautiful; but in the language of the Revelator, "He that is filthy let him be filthy still."

Now, Bro. A. where is your authority, in holy writ, for a "uniform"? Our condemnation will be as great for adding as subtracting commandments, according to the Bible; and I know of no command, either direct or indirect, in the whole Bible, not even as much as a hint or intimation, by Christ or any of his apostles, by which we can even infer that his followers did wear, or shall wear, a "uniform." But the evidence is clearly all on the other side. Peter was not known by his uniform, when he denied his Master. They said, "Surely thou also art one of them, for thy speech betrayeth thee." Speech betrayed him, not uniform. When we as a church wake up to a full sense of our duty, and go and "preach the Gospel to every creature," according to the great command, then we will not only make a trip to Maine, where we were rejected on account of our "peculiarities," not because we preached the Gospel. Oh, no! Thenwe will get where millions of souls hunger after the bread of life, among many nations in the frigid zone; but we bring with us a "uniform," and even an ordinance that denies them the wearing of a fur cap; yet they do and must wear fur from head to foot.

But let us take our uniform and go an opposite direction, and try it on the many millions of poor benighted heathens in the torrid zone, who never saw the necessity of wearing more than a simple feather on the head. There the simple "Duster" would make, perhaps, the most suitable uniform, but that is denied. The borders of Christ's Kingdom reach from pole to pole, and embrace every clime, and the plan of salvation is broad enough to accommodate every condition and circumstance of man, and not only a little speck in the Temperate Zone of the United States of America.

I know that I am occupying forbidden ground. May God help me to "give a reason of the hope" that is in me. One thing more in conclusion, on the favorite text of Bro A., and those who agree with him. "Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate, &c." Do those brethren try to teach the idea, that all men of low degree wear this uniform? or in order to condescend to the poor beggar we must put on his filthy rags? or does it mean an act of benevolence and kindness, or both? Those of us who are not wearing the "phylactaries" as broad as brother A. would have us, would like to know what he understands by that passage, and whether that is the strongest proof for a "Christian uniform."

C. C. MUSSELMAN.

For the COMPANION.

The Jewish Sabbath.

There are some who contend that we should keep the seventh day as the Sabbath, as given in the law that God gave to Moses on Mt. Sinai, (Exodus 20.) We propose to show that it is not correct; for "Christ is the end of the Law for righteousness, to every one that believeth," (Rom. 10: 14.) "Now the end of the commandment (or Law) is Charity, out of a pure heart," (Tim. 1: 5.) The Law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless," for men that are guilty of anything contrary to sound doctrine. (1 Tim. 1: 5.) The law was our school-master to bring us to Christ; but Christ having now come, and we now being justified by faith in Christ, are no longer under a schoolmaster, (Gal. 3: 24, 25.) The same trouble arose in the time of the apostles by some brethren that came from the sect of the Pharisees,(Acts 15: 5). These troubled the brethren, saying, "Ye must be circumcised, and keep the Law; (Acts 15: 24.) Some will say that circumcision was only what they contended for; but, take notice, circumcision was not the law of Moses, (Gen. 17: 10, 14,) but was the Abrahamic covenant. But they contended that they "must be circumcised," and "keep the Law of Moses." Now the Apostles and Elders came together for to consider this matter, and their sentence was: We give no such commandment, that they should be circumcised; nor that they be required to keep the Law of Moses" (Acts 15: 19, 24.) "For by the deeds of the Law there shall no flesh be justified;" Rom. 3: 20. "But now the righteousness of God without the Law is manifested;" Rom. 3: 21. "Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the Law) how that the Law hath dominion over man as long as he liveth;" Rom. 7: 1. "For the woman (the Jewish Church) which hath a husband, is bound by the law to her husband (the Law of Moses) as long as he liveth; but if the husband (the Law) be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. Rom. 7: 2. So then, if, while her husband (the Law of Moses) liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress." Now the Pharisees had married their own traditions while their husband was yet alive, (Matt. 15: 9.) hence Christ called them an "adulterous generation;" Matt. 12: 36. But if her husband be dead, she is free from that Law, so that she is no adulteress though she be married to another man;" Rom. 7: 3. "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the Law [of Moses which law was your former husband,] by the body of Christ, [Rom. 7: 4] your former husband having been crucified and nailed to the cross, [Col. 2: 14.] "that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead" [Rom. 7: 4.] and they two shall be one flesh." "This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the Church- Eph. 5: 31, 32.

The Law was our school-master to bring us to Christ; but when we came to Christ, "we are no longer under a school-master." Gal. 3: 24, 25. Being "led of the Spirit, ye are not under the Law. Gal. 5: 18. "For the Law made nothing perfect; but the bringing in of a better hope did. Heb. 7: 19. "For if there had been a Law given which could have given life, verily, righteousness should have been by the Law" [Gal. 3: 21,] "Therefore, whosoever of you are justified by the Law, ye are fallen from grace;" [Gal. 5: 4.] "For all the Law is fulfilled in one word, even in this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. [Gal. 5: 14].

Again: "Tell me," says Paul, "ye that desire to be under the Law, do ye not hear the Law? For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid the other by a free woman." Gal. 4: 21, 22. "Which things are an allegory; * * * for this Hager is Mt. Sinai, and answereth to Jerusalem, which now is, and is in bondage with her children;

[Gal. 4 : 24, 25.] "Nevertheless what saith the Scripture? Cast out [Mt. Sinai and Jernsalem] the bondwoman and her son, [or the Law and those that are under the Law,] for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the [Law of Mt. Sinai] bondwoman, but of the freewoman;" [Gal. 4 : 31.] "And if Christ shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed;" [John 8: 36.]

SAM'L CRONSE.

Clarksville, Iowa.

The Care and Favors of God.

In the third chapter of the First Epistle of Peter, while teaching the duty of wives and husbands, how they should live, he says, "Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing;" 9th verse. In the 11th verse he says, "Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace and ensure it." Peter, no doubt, had reason and he felt to say in the language of the 12th verse, "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." 13th verse, "And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" What peace of mind do Christians have, when we know that we are living under the promises of God, that we have the promise that he will ever be with us. His eyes never sleep. John says, in the 19th chapter, 31st verse, "Now we know that God heareth not sinners; but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth." Brethren and sisters, let us think for a moment, what a kind Father we can have, who will stick to us closer than a brother, if we will only hear him and are willing to obey him. We are exposed to difficulties, trials and disappointments —many things that are calculated to destroy our peace with God; but when we are willing to follow him through evil as well as good report, when we are willing to follow him in all of his appointed ways, he has promised to be with us in the sixth trial and in the seventh he will not forsake us. Has not God always been mindful of his people? But his face has been, and is to-day, against them that do evil. But it is not his will that any should perish, but he wants all to be saved.

The children of Israel had the promise of entering into the promised land, if they would keep the laws and statutes of the Lord; but we find that by their disobedience their carcasses fell in the wilderness. Out of six hundred thousand, besides women and children, and those who were not able to bear arms, but two were permitted to enter into the promised land. Here we see that the eyes of the Lord were over his people, but his face was against them that did evil, or, in in other words, against them that did not obey him. He caused the earth to open her mouth, at one time, and swallow them all up alive.

Again we see, when men had become so sinful that they would not hear the word of the Lord any more, he tells Noah to build an ark for the saving of his house, that he was going to send a flood of water upon the earth, that all that would not hear him would be destroyed When the time came that he was to send the waters upon the earth, Noah and his sons, and sons' wives were told to go in, for they were the only ones that had found favor with God, and the door was shut; and then the waters were sent upon the earth, that all things on the dry land that drew the breath of life were destroyed. Here we see that God's eyes were over his people, but his face was against them that disobeyed him.

Now, if God was so faithful to his word under the former dispensations, is it not reasonable that he should be under the new law? Let us hear. Peter in speaking of Moses says, "For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul that will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." Acts 3: 22, 23. Also in 2 Peter 1: 19, he says, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." The children of Israel instead of walking in the light, in obeying the commands of God, forsook the right way in following after the ways of Baalam, in worshiping idols instead of offering of the blood of bulls and goats; and we have "a more sure word of prophesy," which is the word of God as revealed unto us by his Son, that through his sufferings, his death on the cross, now whosoever will call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. But we should be careful how we take heed unto that sure word of prophecy. There is a possibility, and also a probability, of us living under the displeasure of God. We are taught in one place, that God is angry with the wicked every day. It is not his will that any should be lost, but he wants all to be saved; for there is salvation for all, if we will only accept of the teachings of the Savior and the apostles.

Brethren and sisters, there are many things and ways that we can do and say, that are not pleasing in the sight of God our Heavenly Father. We very often displease him in our talk, such as jesting and joking, idle talking, in not having our words seasoned with salt, and having them on heavenly things. Our conversation and conduct does not show the light it should: does not show that we have been with Christ and learned of him. Often, when we get to the house of God at the appointed time to worship God, we think if the enemy of our souls will have to stand at bay it is then. But how often have we seen brethren, when assembled at the house of God, talking about their worldly affairs, instead of talking of the prospects they have of the future and for that meat which perishes not.

Their introduction properly would be, "How do you do?" "Well, have you commenced harvesting yet?" "Are you done harvesting yet?" "When I sow wheat again I shall do so and so; I think I can improve my ground." And now how is it brethren, are we worshiping God to divine acceptance? We think not. We are told by the apostle, that "he that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Should we not, then, take Jesus and the apostles for our guide? We say, Yes. Wherever we find that the apostles were assembled to worship God, we find them engaged in prayer. The apostles knew very well, that, whenever they assembled in the name of Jesus, the eyes of the Lord were over them, and his ears were open unto their prayers. We should not lay out what we are going to do to-morrow, but let every day provide for itself. We have six days to labor and do our daily work, which is necessary for us to do in order to sustain our bodies; which we can do, and it is our duty.

We are commanded to labor. But while we are laboring to raise something to sustain our frail bodies, we should not forget that spiritual, which is far better than the world can give. We see that these worldly things are perishable. They may give us happiness to some extent, but they are perishable; but the spiritual food which we receive, will last forever: it will not only give us peace in this world, but in the world to come. And, dear reader, the only way we can receive that food, is, by being found in the line of our duty: when we are permitted to enjoy health and strength, to do our labors through the week; and when the Sabbath day comes, let us devote that day to the honor and glory of God, being in his service, speaking of heaven and heavenly things; begin the day with God by calling our families around the family altar of prayer, teaching them while they are young, that they may never depart from the truth. And when we come to the house of prayer, let us be engaged in prayer for our ministering brethren, that a door of utterance may be open unto them, that they may be able to hold for the word of truth in its purity and simplicity; praying for the unity of the church, that there be no derisions amongst them, that we might all earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, that we might be bound together with a seal that the world cannot break; praying for the conversion of a sinful world. In short, let us be up to our every duty, that we might show to the world, and to those around us, that there is a reality in the religion of Jesus Christ. I have written for my good, as well as for others, hoping that we would be engaged in prayer, that those of us who are weak might live with you all in that way, that the eyes of the Lord might be on us, and his ears open to our every prayer.

G. W. North.

The Evangelical Alliance.

The World's Evangelical Alliance, which has been holding its Sixth General Conference in New York, October 2–12th, was organized twenty-seven years ago. A Convention of about 800 persons—clergymen and laymen, professors of theology and eminent authors, from France, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Turkey, Great Britain, Ireland, the United States, Canada and other countries,—met in London, August, 1846. Belonging to fifty distinct ecclesiastical organizations, they nevertheless, agreed, after five days of able and eloquent discussion, on the following platform of doctrine, as a Basis of co-operation:

"That the parties composing the Alliance shall be such persons only as hold and maintain what are usually understood to be Evangelical views, in regard to the matters of Doctrine understated, namely:

"1. The Divine Inspiration, Authority, and Sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures.

"2. The Right and Duty of Private Judgment in the Interpretation of the Holy Scriptures.

"3. The Unity of the Godhead, and Trinity of Persons therein.

"4. The Utter Depravity of Human Nature, in Consequence of the Fall.

"5. The Incarnation of the Son of God, His work of Atonement for sinners of Mankind, and His Mediatorial Intercession and Reign.

"6. The Justification of the sinner by Faith alone.

"7. The work of the Holy Spirit in the Conversion and Sanctification of the sinner.

"8. The Immortality of the Soul, the Resurrection of the Body, the Judgment of the World by our Lord Jesus Christ, with the Eternal Blessedness of the Righteous, and the Eternal Punishment of the Wicked.

"9. The Divine Institution of the Christian Ministry, and the obligation and perpetuity of the ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

"It is, however, distinctly declared:—First, that this brief Summary is not to be regarded, in any formal or Ecclesiastical sense, as a Creed or Confession, nor the adoption of it as involving an assumption of the right authoritatively to define the limits of Christian Brotherhood; but simply as an indication of the class of persons whom it is desirable to embrace within the Alliance. Second, that the selection of certain tenets, with the omission of others, is not to be held as implying that the former constitute the whole body of important truth, or that the latter are unimportant."

Regarding a single grand organization, with a common membership in all parts of the world, as unwieldy and impracticable, it was decided to constitute district organizations, each exclusively responsible for its own proceedings. These district organizations have been formed in (1) Great Britain and Ireland, (2) the United States of America, (3) France, Belgium, and French Switzerland, (4) the North of Germany, (5) the South of Germany and German Switzerland, (6) British North America, and (7) the West Indies. The organization in the United States was established January, 1867, with the title, the American Evangelical Alliance; and its constitution declares:

"The objects of this Association are to promote evangelical union, with a view to greater success in Christian activity; to maintain and exhibit the essential unity of the Church of Christ; to counteract the influence of infidelity and superstition, especially in their organized forms; to assist the cause of religious freedom everywhere; to hold up the supreme authority of the Word of God; to urge the observance of the Lord's day; and to correct the immoral habits of society. And, to accomplish these ends, it proposes to act as a Bureau of Correspondence and Information, obtaining facts and diffusing them, with such suggestions as may seem pertinent, always avoiding a dogmatic or legislative style, and 'endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.'"

General Conferences have been held, at intervals of four or five years, in Paris, Geneva, Berlin and Amsterdam; and the recent session in New York is the first convened in this country. It called together a number of distinguished men; though death prevented the attendance of D'Aubigne, from Switzerland, of Guthrie, from Scotland, of Hoffman, from Prussia, and of Mellvaine and Schmucker, from America; while Tischendorf, of Liepzig, was disabled by severe illness, and public official engagements detained Pressense, of Paris, and Van Loon, of Amsterdam. Among the notabilities present, we observe the names of Tholuck, from Halle, of Krummacher, from Brandenburg, of Payne Smith, from Canterbury, of Cairns, from Berwick, of Chriestlieb, from Bonn, of Gosterzee, from Utrecht, of Arnot, from Edinburg, of Rigg, from Westminster, of Parker and Angus, from London, of Dorner, from Berlin, etc. Drs. M. B. Anderson and Alvah Hovey, among our Northern brethren, and Drs. R. Fuller and J. L. M. Curry, among our Southern brethren, are the only American Baptists, we believe, to whom positions were assigned as speakers.

The Evangelical Alliance recognizes the impossibility of organic union among churches, and professes to cast no censure on the denominational distinctions, by which its members are parted, one from the other, in the ecclesiastical sphere. With that profession and recognition, it claims to be a form embodying spiritual fellowship among Christians.—Christian Index.

The Day is Done.

H. W. LONGFELLOW.

The day is done, and the darkness
Falls from the wings of night,
As a feather is wafted downward
From an eagle in his flight.

I see the lights of the village
Gleam through the rain and mist,
And a feeling of sadness comes o'er me,
That my soul cannot resist,—

A feeling of sadness and longing,
That is not akin to pain,
And resembles sorrow only
As the mist resembles the rain.

Come read to me some poem,
Some simple and heartfelt lay,
That shall soothe this restless feeling,
And banish the thoughts of day.

Not from the grand old masters,
Not from the bards sublime,
Whose distant footsteps echo
Through the corriders of time.

For, like strains of martial music,
Their mighty thoughts suggest
Life's endless toils and endeavors,—
And to-night I long for rest.

Read from some humbler poet,
Whose songs gush from his heart,
As showers from the clouds of summer,
Or tears from the eyelids start.

Who through long days of labor,
And nights devoid of ease,
Still heard on his soul the music
Of wonderful melodies.

Such songs have power to quiet
The restless pulse of care,
And come like the benediction
That follows after prayer.

Then read from the treasured volume
The poem of thy choice,
And lend to the rhyme of the poet
The beauty of thy voice.

And the night shall be filled with music,
And the cares that infest the day,
Shall fold their tents like the Arabs,
And as silently steal away.

Parisian Foundlings.

The following is a continuation of the editorial correspondence of the Baltimore American, furnished us by brother D. P. Sayler, of which we published part last week. We regard it as instructive, to be informed of the customs of other nations. And such instruction may be made profitable, even down to the dog story. Brother Sayler prefaces the items with the following:

The foundling hospital of Paris is equally revolting, and betrays a horrid state of morals there and at Vienna. The paragraph on the love of dogs, by the women of Paris and other European cities, is disgraceful to her sex. I will send it along and if the editor thinks it too much of that kind of reading for his people, he will put it in his waste basket.

D. P. SAYLER.

The official returns of the hospitals of Paris show that of the 55,000 births in the city during the past year, 15,366 were illegitimate. The proportion of the illegitimates to the number of inhabitants is not quite up to that of Vienna, which has 9,000 for one million inhabitants, whilst the population of Paris is nearly two millions. In various parts of Paris boxes called tours are established, which revolve upon a pivot, and, on a bell being rung, are turned around by the person inside to receive any child that may have been deposited in it, without attempting to ascertain who the parents are. The child is taken to a hospital and cared for, and so soon as a nurse from the country can be procured, is given in charge of one of them. Nurses from the country, of good character, are always applying for these infants, to whom are paid by the city from four francs to eight francs per month, according to the age of the child, care being taken to assign the children to nurses living as far as possible from their birth places. After two years of age, the nurse may give the child up, when, if no other nurse can be found for it, it is transferred to the Orphan Department. Sometimes they become so attached to the children that they retain them. The number of children thus placed out in the country to nurse is about 4,000 annually. The abolition of this humane custom of receiving these little waifs and asking no questions in some of the departments has caused infanticide to become very frequent. As for infanticide before birth, the number is said to have doubled and trebled in some districts, and risen to four and five times its amount in others. The average of foundlings maintained at the Paris Hospital is 4.400. At the age of twelve the boys are bound apprentice to some trade at the expense of the city. A portion of 148 francs is awarded by the city to female foundlings when they marry, provided their conduct has been unexceptionable throughout.

The Hospice des Enfants Assistes, founded in 1640 by St. Vincent of Paul, is for the reception of foundlings. For a child to be received at this hospital, however, it is necessary that a certificate of abandonment must be produced, signed by a Commissary of Police. The Commissary is bound to admonish the mother or party abandoning the child, and to procure for them assistance from the hospital fund in case of their consenting to retain and support the child themselves. Every encouragement is thus given to those who relinquish the idea of abandoning their offspring and consent to support them at home. Of the children received at this hospital those that are healthy are put out in the country to nurse, whilst those that are sick are retained at the hospital as long as requisite. The number of beds in this hospital is about 600, and the number of children annually sent from it to the country is about 3,400. The children are first placed in a general reception room called La Creche, where they are visited in the morning by the physicians, and assigned to the different infirmaries. In each of these infirmaries, as well as in La Creche, cradles are placed around the walls in rows, and several nurses are constantly employed in attending to them. An inclined bed is placed in front of the fire, on which the children who require it are laid, and chairs are arranged in a warm corner in which children of sufficient age and strength sit part of the day. Everything is admirably conducted, and to all outward appearances the children are kindly and humanely cared for.

THE LOVE OF DOGS.

All over Europe the love of dogs among all sexes is remarkable, although they are made to work in Switzerland and some parts of Germany. Here in Paris it is quite common to see a mother dragging her almost infant child by the hand, weary and fretful, and carrying a dog in her arms, which she will occasionally stop to kiss, or dispose of so as to make it more comfortable. This trait is peculiar to one class, but all seem to have a strong affection for the dog. To see a lady at her door or window without a lap dog is almost a novelty, whilst many of them carry in their arms or lead them by a ribbon in the streets. The corners are posted with handbills of hospitals for dogs, where the best medical attendance can be had, and dog medicines and dog soaps are placarded in all directions. On the boulevards, at night, the dealers in dogs are constantly perambulating with two or three pups in their arms, and ladies will stop and bargain for them on the public thoroughfare. They teach them all manners of tricks, and they are valued according to the education they have received and the intelligence they display. When they travel they take a nurse with them to attend to the wants and comfort of the dog, and these nurses can be seen in the public squares airing and exercising the dogs, and leading them by ribbons. Some idea of the extent of this dog mania may be judged from the fact that the dog tax paid into the city treasury last yer was 420,000, or nearly $100,000. The men, also, have their dogs, but not to such a great extent as females. They are mostly beautiful little animals, as white as snow, and are kept scrupulously clean, more care being evidently bestowed on them in this respect than many of the children receive from their mothers.

Yours, &c., C. C. F.

Zeal, But not According to Knowledge.

A zeal for God but not according to knowledge, is not, it is to be supposed, a true zeal for God at all. It is a zeal that has done more against the cause of God than it ever has done for it.

It was a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge, which crucified the Son of God. That deed was the work of the visible church of the time; led on by its ministers, the priests and chief priests, and represented by its leading members, the self-righteous Pharisees. They professed to be actuated by a zeal for God; by a zeal for his Sabbaths and his name. Blasphemy was the accusation they professed to bring.

It was a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge which led Paul, when his name was Saul, to drag men and women from Damascus to Jerusalem, to imprisonment and death, because they were Christians.

It was a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge, which led the men who commissioned him to that work, to be afterwards equally violent and clamorous for his death when he too was numbered among the Christians. "I was zealous toward God, as ye all are this day," was the language of the Apostle to them.

It was a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge, which, at a later day, doomed the very elect of God to cruel tortures and dark dungeons. The dark ages it lighted with the fires of persecution and condemned the righteous of earth to death. It was such a zeal which inflamed Christians against one another, and arrayed the different divisions of his Church, followers of Christ, under different names, in criminating dissensions and bitter hostility against each other; leading men to say, not, Behold how these Christians love one another! but, Behold how they fight and war upon each other. Not, Behold the peace and good will they bring to men, but, Behold the bloodshed, the threatenings and slaughter with which they bestrew the world, even with the blood of their brethren, and the blood of those whom the blood of a Redeemer was shed to save. Thus instead of glorifying God, they led men to blaspheme his name, to reject his gospel, and to turn their feet away from his testimonies.

We in this later, and lighter day, have a security against such perversions of zeal, which they in former times did not possess. The truth is now well established and well understood, that physical power, that force and violence are not at the service of religion. Every form of violence and physical force, we now well understand religion not only discards but forbids. The power of God is in place of it, that power to which all other power is less than dust in the balance, and which is promised to and annexed to the true exhibition of Christianity, in its loving and beneficent nature as exhibited and prescribed in the gospel. It is the spirit of love and not violence by which the gospel is to be propagated. Not the devastating storms, which bring ruin and calamity to good as well as to evil, and do more evil than good, but the Sun of Righteousness, whose influence is like the natural sun, under whose life-giving and life supporting beams, both the evil and the good, the just and the unjust have the blessings of existence and are wooed to God, whose benign rays are the inspiration of life to the world, and of plenty and beauty to the face of nature. This it is which is the emblem, this the spirit of the religion of Christ.

And it is by exhibiting this religion, by preaching it in word and life in its true character, that a true zeal for God is exerted and manifested. And it is this zeal which needs not the disfellowshipping alliance of human power and bloody violence to give it force and efficacy; but the power of God is behind it to give it a divine efficacy, and to make it accomplish that whereto God sends it.

Let every follower of Christ but preach him crucified, in his word and life, and exhibit in his spirit and actions the loving nature and beneficent spirit of the teachings and works and life of his divine Master, and he will exhibit a true zeal for God, which the power of God stands behind to inspire the divine efficiency and to carry to the attainment of its desired results with a certainty as sure and unerring as that with which the forces of nature bring forth vegetation from the earth, and carry the crops to maturity every year that we live.—Christian Mirror.

For the Companion.

Have You Ever Thought?

Our remarks in No. 38, and opening of to day, we will conclude. If not humble followers of Christ, as we should be, we are only an imitation; and if an imitation, a counterfeit; and if a counterfeit, a hypocrite; and if a hypocrite no promise whatever; for the promise is to those who hold out faithful unto the end. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body," and we, "the body of Christ, and members in particular." We being members of one body, the church, and Christ the head, and he being pure, we should undoubtedly endeavor to walk in his foot paths, and be like unto him as much as in us lies. If we do not try to be pure and like unto him, we are in a worse state than we were before our connection with the body of Christ; for if we do not work and bear fruit unto the glory and honor of God, and to the welfare of our everlasting spirits, we are like the fig tree which our Savior came to, when he was hungry, Matth. 21: 19. Now we may learn a very beautiful lesson from the fig tree, that we should bear fruit at all times; for we know not the day nor the hour when the Son of God shall call on us for fruit, and if he find none, he will say, 'Depart from me, I never knew you;" but if he find you bearing fruit, then shall he say, "Come up higher, there yet is room, for in my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so, I would not have told you." From this we learn that there is room for all who will come and bear fruit, whether thirty, sixty, or a hundred fold, and that we should put all confidence in him; for in him we live, move, and have our being. It is the same God, the Father, who created the heavens, and the earth, and the seas, and all that are therein, and the sun, moon and stars. And finally he said, "Let us make man in our own image, after our own likeness." And so created he them, male and female, in all the innocence that the mighty and majestic powers of God, the Father, could imagine for the happiness of our first parents, upon this earth, God's footstool; wherefrom they fell, and sin passed upon all men. From this we must be made pure, and fit subjects for the kingdom of heaven; and for this cause came Christ into this world, to call sinners to repentance, to the inheritance at God's right hand. And now, since Christ came to call a lost and ruined world to repentance, let us accept it in all honesty and purity of heart, as God has so freely and bountifully provided for our salvation, and not come like wolves in sheep's clothing, deceiving ourselves and others, and making a mock of that great plan of redemption, which Jesus so dearly bought on Calvary's rugged brow.

J. W. Witt.

Rural Village, Pa.

The Pleasant World.

There is a prodigious amount of happiness in the world that man does not see. All around us myriads of living things are tasting the new wine of Summer. The brown toad squats blinking in the sun and is a happy toad. Who can take the census of an acre of grass and daisies? There are big red and black butterflies, downy moths and black crickets; there are grasshoppers and spiders; and these are only the "upper ten"; below these come a countless multitude of creatures too fine for our sight. The next field has a population of its own, and the woods yonder harbor new tribes. The sweet air and the sunshine are for them all; theirs are the flowers of the forests; the oak houses theirs; the daisy is their palace; for them, too, the dew falls, and the clouds bring rain, and the seasons revolve; all are in one great family, for whom one Father cares.

For the Companion.

Feetwashing.

I do not expect to prove, in this article, that feetwashing is an ordinanceto be observed by Christians in the nineteenth century. I will let those who deny the essentiality of the ordinance settle it with Christ, the lawgiver. If the words of Jesus do not mean what they say, of course it is well with the so-called Christian world; on the other hand, if they mean what they say, it certainly will be well with the few Christians who practice Feetwashing, according to the example given by the Lord himself. I confess that, at our lovefeasts, when our ministers try to preach to outsiders on this subject, I feel sorry that they do even as much as undertake to prove what the Lord has commanded in words so plain and unmistakable. Brethren, if the words of the Lord do not convince the world that Feetwashing is a Church ordinance, do you suppose that you can prove it by your arguments, although fair they may be? I think it is altogether unnecessary for us to do so. For example: A father of a family makes his will. He wills a certain sum of money to John, his eldest son, on condition that John shall keep and maintain his mother. Now, if the son keeps and maintains the mother, is he not fairly and honestly entitled to the sum of money willed by the father? All will agree that he is. But on the other hand, if the son refuses to keep the mother, and still claims that he is entitled to the money, what then will he do to accomplish the object? Will he say and agree that the will means as it reads? No, he will engage counsel, and he (the lawyer) has to make it appear that the will reads one way but means another. So in our case. Jesus, after he washed the disciples' feet, says, "If I your Lord have washed your feet, you also ought to wash one another's feet:" and then he says, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." What things? Why, those in which he, the Lord and Master, gave them the example. Now, then, if we sincerely obey Christ in what he says and commands, can or will any one say that we will not receive the blessings which he has promised? But, on the other hand, if we refuse to comply with his requirements, and still claim to be entitled to the blessings he has promised, then we must engage the Church, educated counsel, to make it appear that God's will does not mean what it says. We do not often hear sermons preached that the communion is essential; because there are very few Christians who deny it. Then why so much about Feetwashing? Just for the simple reason that we are not unanimous on the point.

What, then, are we to do in the matter? Only one point we should be careful in; that is this, comply with all God's requirements. But let us do so, not only because the Church of which we are a member does so, not because father, mother, and neighbors do so, but because God requires a full service. Let us show to those around us, that we not only do these things, but that we have faith in the word of God. If we show this to the world, it will convince more than all the preaching that can be done. At our lovefeasts, let it be the object of the ministering brethren to admonish the members, who are engaged in obeying the ordinance, so that Jesus may not have cause to say, "These people honor me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me."

Two contending armies are stationed on a field of battle, ready to begin at any time. The signal is given. The generals of the one army take gun and sword to fight the opposing army, while on the other side they are exhorting their men to loyalty, bravery, and pointing them to what shall be gained if they are successful. Which of the two classes would show the greater wisdom? Let us judge for ourselves. Here we are engaged, or at least should be, in the service of our Lord. We certainly need words of cheer, exhortation, encouragement; and if we are loyal to our King, and look forward to the reward which awaits us, we will not only be Christians in form, but in reality. Brethren, let us work together, and our end shall be happy. Will we try to accomplish this? Let each one answer for himself.

M. Hady.

Dale City, Pa.

For the Companion.

The Evil of Tobacco Using.
Did You Ever Think of It?

Reader, you who use tobacco, did you ever think of the evils it genders?

Did you ever think what a great help tobacco using is, to send thousands, on the train of Habit, from habit to intemperance, from intemperance to vice, and from vice to everlasting destruction?

Did you ever think of the thousands of poor children, who are deprived of proper food and raiment, and of proper training and education, on account of tobacco using, whose parents are lounging about with that "Pipe in mouth," fuming away their time and intellect with that noxious weed; or with "quid in mouth,' lounging around the rum shops, and the billiard tables, or ten-pin alleys? Remember, Tobacco Using does not stop with tobacco—it goes on much farther than that—it tends toward intemperance, vice, and destruction, in proof of which we will offer our own observation, and will say, if you show me one inebriate out of ten, who does not use Tobacco, I will show you nine inebriates out of ten who do use tobacco, and who used tobacco before they were given over to strong drink.

Did you ever think of the many poor, hard-working men, who spend from ten to thirty dollars yearly of their hard earned wages to satisfy that despotic appetite for tobacco?

Did you ever think of the account which you perhaps must give to God on account of transmitting a root to your offspring, which may be dreaded as much as a deadly sting of a serpent; and which will be like a millstone hung to their necks to drag them into the bondage of habit, intemperance and vice?

Did you ever think of it, that you shall bring up your children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," where, instead, you are bringing them up in slavery to tobacco; in which they are polluting themselves before they know good from evil?

Did you ever think what injustice you are doing your children, when you threaten and flog them for using tobacco when you yourself, perhaps, are an inveterate chewer and smoker? and besides that, you are, perhaps, raising the filthy weed, and are making your children work at it from beginning to end, and are impairing their health and morality without being aware of it. You may think that you cannot make as much money at anything else, as at tobacco raising, and you may think it brings money into the pockets of hundreds of poor people, in giving them employment; but let me tell you that it also takes money out of the pockets of thousands of the same class of people. We are unable to tell the thousandth part of the evil which tobacco genders.

Let us now raise the curtain a little, and see how distressing it looks to see people around the Communion table, and before they leave it, thrusting a hand into the pocket and taking a chew, and thereby (we might say) defiling the very bread and wine which they have just swallowed in commemoration of a crucified Redeemer. May we not then say they are defiling the temple of the Lord which we should keep Holy. "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service; and be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."

LEVI ANDES.

Sowing the Good Seed.

The Lord must take care of it. All we can do is to sow the seed in faith, water it with prayer as the dew of heaven.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." Some seeds doubtless will fall by the wayside, some on stony places, some among thorns—but other into good ground. Our business is to sow, and keep sowing broadcast, scatter the seed; the Lord will take care of the germination, the growth and the crop; leave the results with him. Paul may plant and Apollos may water, but God alone must give the increase. Do not be discouraged, friends, if the fruit of your labors does not immediately appear. Sow on, pray on. Speak a good word for Jesus, warn the unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. "Be not weary in well doing, for in due time ye shall reap if ye faint not." "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

"Let us do good each day,
To some sad heart, or heart too full of joy;
For gloom with scarce one ray,
And bliss without alloy.
Both need the sympathy we may employ."

One very important method of "sowing the good seed" is through the medium of the press, the circulation of good books, papers and tracts. These will impart light and life, preach when no audible voice is heard, in the house and out of it, by the wayside, at the merchant's desk, in the stage coach, the steamboat, the rail car, the closet, the domestic circle; they preach and keep preaching when we sleep and when we wake. They hesitate not to declare the whole truth, boldly, compromisingly. Many pulpits fail to do this.

Lecturing and preaching are great things, but they are not the greatest. They can do something which the press cannot do; but the press can do much which they cannot do. Printed leaves can go everywhere. They never blush—know no fear—never stammer—never die. They can be multiplied without end. Books and tracts can travel at little expense. They want nothing to eat. They require no lodgings. They run up and down like the angels of God, blessing all, giving to all, and asking no gift in return. You can print them of all sizes, on all subjects, in all places, and at all hours. And they can talk to one as well as a multitude, and to a multitude as well as to one. They require no public room to tell their story in. They can tell it in the kitchen or the shop, the parlor or the closet, in the railway carriage or the omnibus, on the broad highway or in the footpath through the fields; and they dread no noisy or tumultuous interruption. They take no notice of scoffs, or jeers or taunts of noisy folly, or malignant rage. They bear all things, suffer all things. They can talk even when the noise is so great as to drown all other voices. No one can betray them into hasty or random expressions. And they will wait men's time, and suit themselves to men's occasions and convenience. They will break off at any point, and begin at any moment where they left off. And though they will not always answer questions, they will tell their story twice or thrice, or four times over, if you wish them. And they can be made to speak on every subject, and on every subject they may be made to speak wisely and well. They can, in short, be made vehicles of all truth, the teachers and reformers of all classes, the regenerators and benefactors of all lands.

"We want our friends to give this subject their attention. We feel persuaded that the importance of the press, as a means of spreading simple, gospel truth and promoting Christian piety, is not yet fully understood; or if it is, the press has never been sufficiently employed in this great work."

Is it not marvelous to see how few professing godliness avail themselves of the easy and efficient mode of preaching! How seldom do visitors and travellers furnish themselves with these silent messengers of truth, while the enemy of all righteousness scatters widely the poison of romance, lewdness and infidelity.—D. F. NEWTON.—Christian Chronicle.

How Long and How Many.

How long do you think it took to write the Bible? Fifteen hundred years. From Moses, who wrote Genesis, to St. John, who wrote Revelation, it was that long, long time.

How many people helped to write it? More than thirty. There were Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul and Peter. There were Moses, Ezra David, Daniel, and Samuel. Some were shepherds, some farmers, some fishermen, some tent-makers, some kings, some judges, some princes; some were learned, some were unlearned; and yet they all agree in what they write. There is not so much as a word of disagreement in the whole book. How could that be? Because God did the thinking of the Bible. The thoughts in the Bible are all God's thoughts. Those thirty men only did the writing. They wrote just what God told them. How many different sections of books are there in the Bible? Sixty-six, all bound together, making one beautiful whole. It is a blessed book. Prize it above all the books in the wide, wide world. Make it the man of your counsel and the guide of your life. Your life can never be a failure if you follow its instructions. You will live to purpose, and save your soul, and not thyself only shall be saved, but others through thee.

Envy is strongly characteristic of littleness of mind; a truly noble and generous man feels no enmity towards a successful rival.

The triumph of wit is to make your good nature subdue your censure; to be quick in seeing faults, and slow in exposing them.

The reason why more homage is paid to wealth than wisdom, says a Russian poet, is because one can borrow wealth, but not wisdom.

Idleness among children, as among men, is the root of all evil, and leads to no other evil more surely than ill-temper.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Duncansville Congregation.

Brother Henry: Permit me to give your readers a sketch of church news. Our Lovefeast in the Duncansville branch, came off at the appointed time, (7th and 8th of Oct.,) at which time we enjoyed a happy season together. The ministering brethren present were, John Holsinger, from Dunning's Creek, Dan'l Snowberger, from Yellow Creek, George Brumbaugh and Thomas Maddocks, of Clover Creek, W. H. Quinn, of Warrior's Mark, J. B. Sell, of Dale City, and brother Cassel, of Maryland. About eighty members communed. During the time of the meeting, two were received into the church by baptism, and two were reinstated, all of whom were young in years. May the Lord grant that those young members may hold out faithful to the end. The brethren labored faithfully for us in word and doctrine. In all we had a good meeting; and we believe there have been many good impressions left, that will not soon be forgotten.

Now a word to the brethren and sisters. We have enjoyed a feast together. Let us not go away forgetful of the things we have heard and learned, but let us prove faithful, that, when we are called to pass through the dark valley of the shadow of death we may be prepared to enter those joys that are unspeakable and full of glory. Then, in conclusion I would say to us all, with the apostle Paul, "Finally, my beloved brethren, be steadfast, unmovable, and always abounding in the work of the Lord; inasmuch as you know that your labors are not in vain in the Lord.

DAVID D. SELL.

Newry, Pa.

Two Questions Answered.

"BROTHERLY LOVE."

In the COMPANION for Sept. 30th, page 612, brother D. P. Sayler, (he does not call me brother, hope I may not offend him by calling him brother,) writes an article under the title "Judge Not."

The little word not seems to have escaped his notice; for he commences judging, and continues judging and condemning from the beginning to the end. The only impression he seems to try to make upon the reader's mind is, that I am a hypocrite with a covetous heart. He says I only "seem to belong" to the church; that I do not believe in the church to which I "profess to belong;" that I would be much nearer home in the Methodist church, and that I have no faith nor sympathy for the Brethren. This is not all—"Those who know him, know his opposition does not stop here.' Indeed! where does it stop?

"I proceed to notice the pretended cause for his tirade against A. M." But he is so determined to pass judgment against me without a hearing, that he does not notice one article of the twenty-seven, and point out wherein it is of any utility to the church.

He says my article "Utility" was written to justify myself for not contributing for the purchase of the canvas tent. Brother Sayler, had I not written that article, it is probable that the brother who asked me to contribute and myself would have been the only ones who knew I gave nothing. This accusation is no more groundless, however, than your other accusations.

You object to my use of the pronouns. I know I often err, grammatically, as well as in other things. Brother Leedy asked the plain, old brother to contribute. Brother Parker and I talked an hour or more to him, but (may I use "our," here?) "our words made no perceptible impressions upon his covetous heart." I lived by the side of this brother for years, and I know the picture I drew of his character is only too true.

Your two questions I will try to answer.

1. "When, on a former occasion, brethren came to the church in which you reside, and money was needed to defray expenses, how much did you then contribute?"

2. "On that occasion, did this plain, zealous, old brother open his covetous heart and give ten dollars?"

"Then," and "former occasions," are very indefinite as to time. But the time, probably, you refer to, is, when you, with other members of a committee, visited the Antioch church, in August of last year. If this is the time referred to, I can answer. I did not give one cent. And if it will be of any advantage to you in elucidating your text, "Judge not," I can also tell you how much I gave on other former and later occasions.

I cannot answer your second question so positively; but I am confident that the plain, zealous brother did not give ten dollors, and, I think, no part of it. He is not a member of the Antioch church. He was not one of the petitioners for a committee; and, I think, was not at the meeting you speak of. I will dismiss the "giving part" of your "Judge not" article, by saying, that I cannot, in justice to my feelings, give anything to defray expenses wherein you are judge and I am one of the accused. Ponder your article, brother Sayler, and you will understand that my reasons for not giving are well-founded.

Brother Sayler, no one knows, perhaps, better than yourself, that much time and money is expended at our A. M. for little good. You write in the C. F. C. for July 22nd, page 462, "Such boasting is almost offensive;" and "it is to be hoped that the moderator will learn wisdom and improve." Yes, let us all try to improve. Brother Sayler, it is manifest that even you do not have sympathy and faith in all that is said and done by our A. M. Would this language apply here—"Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest; for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things"?

Brother Sayler, you and I are not, I fear, in that spirit that the Thessalonians were when Paul wrote, "But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another." Brethren do, from East and West and North and South, write to us in the COMPANION, "as touching brotherly love."

S. M. MINNICH.

Fine Costly Houses and Barns.

Continued from page 170.

After examining the subject in the light in which we have presented it, and, as I believe, the proper light, according to the spirit and letter of the query, I fancy no brother will pretend to say that such things are in harmony with the gospel of Jesus Christ.

But again, it is said, "Have I not a right to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil because I am good?" Those who would claim this scripture as a guarantee to do as they may see fit with the goods which they may have the control of, or, in other words, their own property, I would refer to the parable of the unjust steward. "There was a certain rich man who had a steward," &c. Now all, I presume, will readily acknowledge, that God is represented by this rich man, and that we, as his subjects in this world, are represented by the steward. There is no subject in scripture more clearly taught, than that the "earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof." "Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands." "Ye call me Master and Lord, and ye say well, for so I am." "Ye are not your own, but ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your bodies, and in your spirits which are his." "And the disciples were together and had all things common; and no man said that aught that he possessed was his own."

From these, and many other similar scriptures, which might be adduced had we time or inclination, we certainly must be convinced of our position, that we are only stewards of God, placed over His goods, just as the steward in the parable was over his master's property; this must be apparent.

If, then, we are the stewards of the Lord, the question naturally arises, What are we to do with, or how will the Lord have us to dispose of, the proceeds of this property which He has placed under our control? In order to be able to give a satisfactory answer to this important, yea, momentous inquiry,—momentous, because in it are the issues of life and death,—it will be necessary to ascertain what is the greatest concern of God in the universe. From every fact and circumstance pertaining to God, in His various attributes, of which we are in possession, we come to the conclusion that the greatest concern of God is, first, His own glory; second, the glory of Jesus Christ, his Son; and lastly, the salvation and glory of His creature man.

It is said of man, that "his chief end is to glorify God." God has been glorified in the maintenance of His word, or law, which declared that man should die, and which was rigidly fulfilled in the person of His Son. Jesus says, "I have glorified thee upon the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do; and now, O Father, I leave the world and come to thee. Glorify thou me with that glory which I had with thee before the world was. And now, O Father, I am no more in the world; but these are in the world. I pray for them, that thou wouldst keep them through thy truth; that they may be with me where I am, that they also may behold my glory." "I pray not for the world; I pray for them that thou hast given me out of the world, that they all may be one as we are one." "Neither pray I for these alone; but for them also who shall believe on me through their word, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent."

From this it will be clearly seen that the greatest solicitude which the Savior felt, even in His darkest hour of trial, was the salvation of the world—"That the world may believe that thou hast sent me." This then was to constitute His future glory; therefore, whatever means can be employed as the most effectual in the accomplishment of this glorious purpose, is evidently the imperative duty of His stewards.

But the question is often asked by those who are intrusted with a great deal of property,—which, as we have seen, does most assuredly belong to the Lord—"How much am I compelled to give for the furtherance of the cause of Christ, in order to not be as the unfaithful servant? Or where is the stopping place?"

In answer to this inquiry I will just make a simple illustration. Suppose one of our fellow-citizens wishes to become President of these United States, and has set his whole heart and soul upon its achievement. He is a rich man, owning vast stores of wealth, and in order to the sure success of his fond desire in the glorifying of his name among men, as President, he places all his vast wealth in the hands of certain agents, or stewards, with the definite understanding that the proceeds of it are to be used for the furtherance of his interests. Suppose him to place in your hands, dear reader, $5,000 in gold, with specific instructions, that you are to have your own and your family's support out of it, but the residue to be faithfully applied to the advancement of his interests in securing his election. He also promises you positively, that, if he finds you can dispose of more to advantage, he will still supply you from time to time, as you have need. This appointment is fully published throughout the land. But it so happens that this rich, good man, has a strong rival, who also has his heart fully set on his total defeat. He also is rich, not in goods and the necessaries of life, but in subjects and territory. The kingdom of this world is the kingdom of darkness—"the Prince and power of the air, the spirit that ruleth in the hearts of the children of disobedience, among whom ye shine as lights." This wicked rival of the good man, in order to defeat him, floods the whole country with his subjects, for the express purpose, that they may be a clog, or annoyance, and a hindrance to the success of the good man's hopes. The steward now enters upon the functions of his appointment, and here are those minions of the bad man surrounding him, and meeting him at every point, importuning him for favors out of the proceeds of the money placed in his hands; and whenever he refuses to supply them, they take advantage of his refusal to work to the prejudice and detriment of his master, thereby very materially retarding his interests. But suppose, that while there are thousands of the emissaries of the bad man, which, probably, through kindness and faithfulness upon the part of the steward, he might win over to the interest of his master, and also many, yea, very many who are already friends, but who are so constituted, that there might be some danger of driving them over to the side of the enemy; these are all in suffering circumstances, and needing the very means which this steward has in his hands to bestow. But instead of contributing to their necessities, he begins to build for himself and heirs "fine, costly houses and barns." His own table groans under the abundance of luxuries and delicacies; and upon his own person and those of his family are exhibited fine linen and purple, fine hats, and fine bonnets, fine caps and laces, fine boots and fine shoes, &c. In his house are paintings and hangings, fine curtains, bedsteads, mattresses, carpets, sofas, settees, couches, lounges, melodeons, organs, queensware and china, glassware and silver, pearls and rubies, &c. Oh! brethren, for God's sake and your own soul's sake, look at the picture. I do assure you that it is by no means overdrawn; but, on the contrary, comes far short of the reality. What do you say of such a steward? Guilty! guilty!! guilty!!! guilty before God!!!! God be merciful to our unfaithfulness. Amen.

I want now, to present this subject under another form of metaphor. I do candidly believe, that if there is any one thing, some of our dear brethren, and sisters too, have erroneous ideas about more than others, it is upon the article of dress, which also is one point in the query under consideration, and which, as brother Benchley very prudently remarks, "demands our prayerful attention."

I don't know whether the brother means, by this remark, that the other parts of the query do not demand our prayerful attention; but from his manner of treating them, and from his introduction of the expression at the point which he did, I inferred as much. If I have misconstrued him in any sense, I here take this opportunity of asking his pardon. My only apology is, (for writing what I have written) that I think the subject of too much importance to be treated lightly.

I have said, that upon the subject of dress I fear we had some erroneous ideas. Some seem to think that it does not matter what kind of garments we have on, so that we have them cut to a certain pattern. Others, to the contrary, contend that it matters not as to pattern, so that they are "modest." Now I do think, beloved brethren and sister, that there is just as great an extreme in one, as the other. I am clearly of opinion from the very best authority,—that of the Holy Scriptures,—that the sin is neither in the pattern nor out of it, neither in the dress cut by it nor that cut contrary to it, but that it consists in a different thing altogether. I have ever since

I have been a member of the church of the Brethren, as those who are acquainted with me can testify, strongly advocated uniformity in dress; but while I advocated it with all my power and the earnestness of my soul, I knew it was an absolute impossibility under the present state of things, and I do earnestly pray, brethren, that the Lord will hasten on the time when the church will be of such a oneness, that it will answer the Savior's prayer, "that the world may believe in the holy religion of the Lord Jesus Christ." But, my dear brethren and sisters, this can only take place when we come back to the purity of the primitive faith; when no man says that aught that he possesses is his own; when none looks upon his own things, but upon those of another; when they esteem others better than themselves. Uniformity comprehends more than simply form or shape. If, then, we would insist on a uniformity, we must insist on some standard, at which we can come to that uniformity. This can only be effected by helping the poor up on a level with the rich, or by helping the rich down on a level with the poor. Now as both these are impossible, there is only one alternative left, and that is, to equalize on the middle ground. Some brethren pay $50, and some even more, for a suit of clothes, some of the sisters probably half that amount. Now $25 will buy any man a respectable suit of clothes in any market in this country; therefore the man might save $25; and this would buy some poor brother a suit just like his; and if, perchance, the poor brother was able to pay $12 50 to buy himself a suit, then he could divide those $25 between two, and thus make a farther uniformity.

But I know that I am spending time and paper in vain, in making these suggestions, because I know they will not be regarded; but I have this consolation, that I have delivered my soul from your blood. "If the people take a man of their coast and place him upon the wall as watchman; if he see the sword coming and warn not the people, and the sword come and take them away, then the blood of the people will I require at the hand of the watchman; but if he warn the people and they perish, then their blood will I require at their own hands, and the watchman has delivered his soul."

"Waken, O Lord, our drowsy sense,
To walk this dangerous road;
And if our souls are carried hence,
May they be found with God."

The idea is quite prevalent in the world, and in the church, that persons have a right to dress themselves in proportion to their means, a greater error than which has never been indulged in by any people. As I have before remarked, that the sin of dressing do s not consist exclusively in the shape of one's dress, but in the excess and extravagance of it. If it were a fact, that what we are in possession of belongs to us exclusively, then, I admit, there might be some show of plausibility in the assertion; but when we consider that we are only the stewards of God, and therefore in honor bound to employ all the means over which we have control to the subservance of his interests, how do we then take that which rightly belongs to another, for the gratification of our own lusts? "For if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's who will commit to you the true riches?" Therefore the sin lies in our unfaithfulness as the stewards or servants of Christ, in appropriating his blessings to our own special enjoyment, whether it be in building us fine houses, fine, costly barns, or in fine costly clothing without regard to fashion or style.

A man may buy himself a fine cloth suit, with other articles to correspond, for which he will pay $50.00, or a sister, a silk, or some other costly dress, with its correspondings, and they may have them cut in the most ancient style of the brethren, and yet the excess, the extravagance, the sin is just as great as though they were made after the latest fashion of Paris. Why so? Because they are in the very same condition of the unfaithful, or unjust steward; they are wasting their Lord's money, which, if properly employed, might have been the means of saving a soul from death, and thereby glorifying the Lord Jesus Christ.

The foregoing remarks remind me of an incident which occurred not long since at a meeting. In my discourse, I had occasion to remark, that there was then and there before me in the church extravagance enough in dress, to send twenty poor children to school ten months, which would be money far better employed than wasting it in superfluous dressing.

In conclusion of what I have to say in this essay, let me again recur to my allegory of the two rivals, the good and bad men. We will again suppose that the good, rich man places one talent in gold, in the hands of every man, thus making the distribution quite equal, so far as money is concerned; but the persons are differently capacitated, having different dispositons of mind. While one man thinks, that he can best promote his master's interest by tilling the soil, another believes that he can do most for the master's interests by talking to his neighbors about his good qualities; therefore while the one spends the time given him in talking, he is making nothing to supply his natural wants, while the other, by the course which he has chosen is making those very things of which the other stands in need. The consequence is, that one is forced from circumstances to dispose of his golden talent to the other, for the things which he has need. The question now is: Is the talent which he has thus acquired, really his own? Has he a right to appropriate it to his own enjoyment, in the building of fine houses and costly barns? I have now given a very faint outline of my views on this important question; hoping the brethren will examine them carefully and prayerfully, I remain your brother,

JESSE CROSSWHITE.

Report From Spring Run.

The lovefeast in Spring Run congregation, Mifflin county, Pa., commencing Oct. 5th, is now over, and we had a good meeeting. The ministerial aid was al ndant. At this meeting a deacon brother was elected to the ministry, (John S. Hanawalt,) and three persons baptized. Since about the first of April, twenty four have been admitted by baptism, and nearly half as many by certificate.

About two hundred communicants were present, and as a few could not be seated at the tables, several strange members, (especially such as had been or expected to be at another lovefeast) yielded their seats to as many of this congregation.

A movement is on foot to build a meeting-house in Mattawana, which should be a large one, with a gallery, so as to accommodate many members, and also a large number of spectators.

The Spring Run meeting-house should also have a gallery. The want of sufficient room to accommodate the people here, is a strong argument in favor of the new meeting-house being a large one. Too many meeting-houses are barely large enough at the time of building, and then as the church increases, and the audience grows larger, the house is too small.

S. W. BOLLINGER.

McVeytown, Pa.

CERRO GORDO, ILL. }
October 6, 1873. }

Brother Holsinger:

In No. 21, current volume, there is an item of church news, by J. P. Replogle, headed, "From Cerro Gordo, Ill." This means Cerro Gordo postoffice, and not Cerro Gordo congregation. As there is some dissatisfaction in the Cerro Gordo congregation about it, you will please publish this explanation, and oblige,

Fraternally,
J. P. REPLOGLE.

BRETHREN EDITORS: I want to tell the readers of the C. F. C. about our lovefeast, on the 4th of Oct., at brother David Kingery's, in Monroe Co., Iowa. I never saw a more quiet, orderly meeting. The old, gray-headed Elders told the people, that although they had been at many such meetings, they had never seen better behavior. The word was preached with power by the brethren from adjoining counties—A. Replogle, D. Sink, Wm. Stickler, S. P. Miller. I believe every member present felt happy in obeying the ordinances of our Lord and Master; and felt that he was present with his Good Spirit. The brethren and sisters had gathered in from six counties, from all the Southern District of Iowa, except one county, and had not the rain hindered there would have been some from two more counties, as they had made arrangements to come. It was a time of refreshing. Our troubles were forgotten, for the time being, and joy beamed on many faces.

HANNAH KNOUFF.

From La Grande, Oregon.

EDITORS C. F. C.: Now a little concerning our Valley. We are situated in the northeastern part of Oregon, east of, or partly amongst, the Blue Mountains, about 400 miles west of Kelton, on the Central Pacific Railroad, 90 miles east of Columbia River, the nearest place of navigation, and Portland, the chief commercial city of Oregon, is some over 300 miles from this place. The valley proper is 20 by 30 miles in extent, surrounded by low hills and mountains. Grand Round River enters the valley at the south-west, runs across the valley to the east side, thence to the north-east, a distance of 50 miles. The length of the river in the valley would measure over 500 miles. The land is the finest soil, with excellent grazing for stock. The valley is principally prairie. The mountains are covered with pine, fir, tamarick, spruce, and yew timber. We have a fine fruit country. There is quite a number of bearing orchards, none of which have failed to raise abundance of fruit; some have borne for six years in succession. Wheat, oats, barley, are the chief products of grain. Vegetables of all kind are produced in abundance. This has been an unusually bountiful crop year; but wheat is only worth 50 cents per bushel, oats and barley, three-fourths of a cent per pound. There are five first-class flouring mills in the valley, and nine sawmills. Our markets are the gold and silver mines of Eastern Oregon and Idaho. Stock raising is the principal dependence for finance. Stock is raised with but very little expense, requiring but little or no prepared feed in winter. The climate compares favorably with that of the Middle States, except that it is not so cold in winter. The coldest weather in six years was, one day, 6 degrees above zero. The coldest usually is from 17 to 25 degrees. For health it will compare favorably with any part of the United States; and for beautiful scenery, is unsurpassed anywhere. We number about 2,000 inhabitants in the valley. Property valuation, $1,500,000. Choicest unimproved lands can be had for $2.50 per acre; improved, from $5 to $20. Cattle 5 cts. per lb., gross weight; sheep, 3 to 4 dollars each; hogs, 3 to 5 cents per pound, gross weight. Labor $2.00, mechanics $4.50 to $5.00 per day, and other things in proportion. Good schools. Churches of the different denominations, except the brethren. I know of none except my family, this side of the Williamette Valley.

J. W. DICKEY.

Announcements.

LOVE-FEASTS.

Bachelor Run, Carroll Co., Ind., Oct. 25.

Beaver Dam, Md., Oct. 25.

Dry Creek, Linn county, Iowa, Nov. 1, and 2.

Six miles west of Chesies Station, Merced county, Cal.

Salomony Arm, Huntington, Ind., Oct. 28.

Buffalo, Valley, Union county, Pa., Oct 30.

Fairview, Appanoose county, Iowa, Oct. 31.

LIST OF MONEYS RECEIVED for SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS, etc.,

J Eisenhower	1 50	Lizzie Shade	2 25
H A Snyder	6 65	F Holsinger	30
W J H Bauman	5 00	Geo Kinsey	10 00
P Miller (per B Beachley)	1 50	John H Schroch	1 25
John B Schrack	1 60	P S Garman	1 00
		T F Imler	1 50

WE will admit a limited number of select advertisements at the following rates
One insertion, 20 cents a line.
Each subsequent insertion 15 cents a line.
Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.
No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations.

TRAPERS, &c.

How to trap, and fish, and tan furs. All for 50 cents. Address
WILLIAM DAILY.
Nimisilla,
9: 41—5°. Summit Co., Ohio.

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS.

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.
EDW'D J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen,
YORK, PA

THE "SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS.

Manufactured by E. P. Needham & Son, 143, 145 & 147 East 13d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passengers Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:

MT. DALLAS ACCOM., at 7: 50 A. M.

HUNTINGDON EXPRESS at 2: 55 P. M.

RETURNING.

EXPRESS leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.

ACCOMMODATION, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. in time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c.

W. H. BROWN, Supt.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE
By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.

This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works, "NIGHT SCENES," and "OUR FATHER'S HOUSE," nearly 100,000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. ZEIBER & M'CURDY, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1 00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,
J. H. MOORE,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

Farm For Sale.

Guardian sale of 119 acres of choice land. Will be sold at public sale Tuesday, Sept. 23d, 1873. Well located, well watered, good improvements, bank barn, brick house, with all the necessary out-buildings; situated only 5 miles from good market; located in the western part of Milton Township, about midway between Smithville on the south and Pike Station on the A. & G. W. R. R., in Wayne county, Ohio, known as the Pinkerton farm. DAVID LATIF.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2 50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARISE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-tf.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary Word-for-word English Translation. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. WILLIAM AIKMAN, D. D. $1.50.

Man, in Genesis and in Geology; or the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. WELLS. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporaneous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Aims and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By GEORGE COMBE. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structure and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid,	1.25
Per dozen " "	13 30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 60 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1 25 per copy, postpaid, or $10.00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$2.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	2.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25

32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION. 25

BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA. $1.70

Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Moomaw, prepaid, .75

Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid, .75

12 copies, by Express. 7.00

Pious Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid, .45

Browns Pocket Concordance, .60

German & English Testaments, .75

READ'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid, 1.45

" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid 1.40

COMPANION Volume 3, bound post paid, $2.7

Reserved at the office, 2.25

HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An Illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco. To ministers on Tobacco, Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63, Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interst.

288 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,

431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

Will fill orders for Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or PANACEA West of Ohio.

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.

Waynesboro, Franklin Co. Pa.

Will control the Eastern and Southern States. All letters should be carefully directed as above, and letters containing money must be registered.

This year was more favorable for curing herbs than any other for ten years, the medicine is therefore warrented perfect.

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, NOV. 4, 1873. NUMBER 44.

Old Age.

A songless bird, a garden without flowers,
A river-bed dried up in thirsty hours,
A sterile field untutored by the plow,
A withered bosom on a withered bough,
A flickering light that fails when needed most
To warn the sailor from a treacherous coast,
A thought that dies ere yet 'tis fully born,
A hope that gleams like poppies 'midst the corn,
Fair idle weeds that flaunter in the sun,
Fair morning hopes that fail ere day be done,
Fair life, so seeming fair, so coldly bright,
Fair life, beloved of Love, and youth's delight—
At early dawn how fresh thy face appears!
The twilight sees it furrowed o'er with tears;
Spring flowers are sweet, but autumn's woods are dry,
Spring birds are silent 'neath a wintry sky;
Spring thoughts the wake to deeds inspire no more,
When the dull daylight fades along the shore;
The ice-blocked stream can bear no precious freight—
The stripped and sapless oak stands desolate,
And the hill fortress that defied the foe
In crumbling fragments fills the vale below.

Yet is there golden beauty in decay,
As Autumn's leaves outshine the leaves of May;
The calm of evening with its roseate light,
The starry silence of the wintry night;
The stillness of repose when storms are o'er,
And the sea murmurs on a peaceful shore;
The brooding memories of the past that make
The old man young again for Beauty's sake;
The hope sublime that cheers the lonely road
Which leads him gently to the hills of God.
—John Dennis.

There is a God.

A learned heathen, not being able to see God, required of a missionary proof of His existence. He was asked, in reply, whether he could see his own soul; and whether he had any doubts of possessing one. "Certainly not," said the pundit. "Such," said the missionary, "is the living God; He is invisible to us, but He is everywhere present."

The only authentic account we have of the creation, opens with the sublime statement, "In the beginning GOD created the heavens and the earth." The existence of a great first cause of all things, is assumed. It is self-evident; it needs not to be proven. And yet there is an abundance of proof. His works prove it. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth His handiwork." Psalms xix: 1.

The marks of design, skill and power, superior to any possible in man, prove that God is. An infidel called one day on ATHANASIUS KIRCHER the celebrated astronomer. Seeing a large and handsome globe of the starry heavens standing in the room, he said: This is a splendid globe. Who made it?" "What would you think," replied the astronomer, "if I should tell you it was never made by any one, but came here by chance?" "That," replied the infidel, "is impossible. You are surely jesting." Kircher smiled, and then looked seriously at his friend and said: "You will not believe that this small body originated by mere chance, and yet contend that those heavenly bodies, of which it is but a faint and diminutive resemblance, came into existence without order or design—without a maker!" The sceptic saw the folly of denying that chance could make a globe, a watch, a house, or any other human invention, and affirming, at the same time, that it could make a universe. He was honest enough to confess his error. Yielding to his convictions, he shortly after acknowledged the Supreme Being, and became His humble worshiper.

"The spacious firmament on high.
With all the blue, etherial sky,
And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim.
The unwearied sun, from day to day,
Doth his Creator's power display,
And publishes to every land
The work of an Almighty Hand.

"Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
And nightly to the list'ning earth,
Repeats the story of her birth;
While all the stars that round her burn,
And all the planets in their turn,
Confirm the tidings as they roll,
And spread the truth from pole to pole.

"What, though in solemn silence, all
Move round the dark terrestrial ball;
What, though no real voice or sound
Amid the radiant orbs be found;
In reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice:
Forever singing as they shine,
The hand that made us is divine."
—Sel.

For the Companion.

Childhood.

Childhood is the happiest period of our existence. The little child is pure and innocent. Its soul is not stained as those of maturer age, and it is not exposed to sin and evil devices as those are of riper age. In childhood all is bright and gay. The child and the youth look forth with bright prospects, and all is bright to them. They go out in the world with bright hopes, and think only of the present; the trials and temptations to endure. The child rises in the morning, and goes forth with spirits joyous and free; and at night lies down to sleep and to dream sweet dreams. No marks of trouble or sorrow rest on his brow; No sad feeling reigns in his heart; but the world is all fair to him. The cares and sorrows of this life he does not feel. I have often thought that in our childhood days, when we are attending school, we are having our best days. But when children arrive to manhood and womanhood, they have the trials and temptations of this world to share, and their business to attend to that they are engaged in; and their minds are kept occupied; and the world and their prospects do not seem as bright as they did in their childhood days. Those days are past and gone, and can never be recalled. Then we think of the happy moments we have spent in our childhood. But childhood, like our earthly existence, cannot last forever. But we have to toil on in this life, and when years pass away, and another generation will arise, and speak of their ancestors that have gone before, and of their childhood days.

From your friend,

Minnie Roelkey.

New Market, Md.

For the Companion.

Time.

Time never tarries. The present moment speeds swiftly by, carrying with it lost chances for improvement never to return. How careless we grow as each succeeding moment goes by laden with golden opportunities! The day rolls on; we put no effort forth;—the next—the next is ours, and passes by the same. Nature through all her works moves onward. The sun no sooner rises than it moves onward to its meridian; nor pauses in mid-heaven, but down the western sky proclaims the close of day. The night cometh when no man can work. Man heeds not. The warnings of the past lie unheeded before him. The remorseful cries of lost millions fall meaningless upon his ears. He breathes, he feels, he moves, decays—yet the soul in its duty slumbers. The night of death with its silence and darkness closes upon him, and "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave." Work while it is called to-day, is the decree of heaven. To-day alone is ours. Yesterday is gone forever; to-morrow never comes. Heaven invites us to-day. A crown of glory is now within our reach, and is it not worth an effort to obtain? Is not that most precious which requires our highest effort to obtain? Shall we prize eternal life the less because we are called to exert our first and highest effort to secure it? Should we not secure that which is most valuable first? How forcible the requirement of Jesus, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and its righteousness." To obtain eternal life should secure our first effort, for if that is lost, all is lost. What are a hundred farms, and the cattle upon a thousand hills compared with the true riches of heaven? So sure as we lose heaven, we lose all.

Time is more valuable than gold. We cannot buy a seat in heaven with gold. With a proper use of time we may secure a hundredfold more in this life, and in the world to come, life everlasting. Time cannot be treasured up. The present time God takes away before he gives us more. Ought we not use the time we have in doing good? Ought we not turn to God to-day, and make heaven secure while time is ours? How few ever know the value of time until it is too late. "Millions for a minute" was among the dying ejaculations of a wicked queen. The coffers of the rich cannot purchase a single moment. So invaluable is time that the wealth of a thousand worlds cannot purchase any part of it, yet a little part of it properly used will secure the boundless riches of eternity.

Let me call the earnest attention of every soul to the great importance of occupying every moment of time during life to active, untiring, persevering discharge of duty towards God and towards man. Every moment of life is precious, and it is especially precious in youth, and it is emphatically so while we are in our sins and opportunities of gaining a knowledge of the truth and of turning to God, are afforded. Our Maker has placed us in this world to improve our time and talent, to develop our power so that we may be able to discharge the active, arduous, and responsible duties of life, and to prepare ourselves for a world to come. The Bible demands that we become men and women in knowledge, in action, in perfection. Our intellectual powers should be cultivated in conformity with the teaching of the Bible that we may realize our high calling of God, indued with powers of mind capable of endless progression in knowledge with an ever accumulating power of enjoyment. A good, practical Christian life will give us a cheerfulness of mind, and will elevate us to a purer atmosphere, a brighter sunshine, and a more congenial sky. If we be deprived of all earthly possessions, we still possess a world of wealth within richer mines than the mines of Penn'a., and more valuable than a thousand worlds though of the purest gold. "Knowing the time that now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light."

"Time past and time to come are not—
Time present is our only lot;
O God! henceforth our hearts incline,
To seek no other love than thine."

DANIEL HAYS.

For the COMPANION.

A Free Press.

As soon as it was known that the COMPANION was passing into other hands, brethren began to speculate as to what would be its future course. It was said, by some, 'Our free press is doomed, and hereafter none but those who see as certain who are in authority see, will have a hearing in its columns." Some of us watched, with anxious eyes, the editorials, for a beam of light on this question. The first beam was, "It is understood that the COMPANION is to be conducted upon the same principles upon which it has been founded, and by which it has gained its popularity." This has the true ring. Now let us quiet our fears.

But I must confess, that, after reading that article in No. 42, on "Woman's Sphere and the Covering Question" to the end, and seeing that this 'ends the discussion of this question in our columns," I said, "Yes, 'tis true, our press liberty is no more."

"It was qualified." "Yes, by "until something is discovered that will be of advantage to the brotherhood." But well I knew that if it was predetermined to cut off the liberties correspondents have had, nothing would be "discovered that will be of advantage to the brotherhood."

Thinking I might be mistaken, I wrote to our editor in charge for light upon this "free press" question. His reply is so full of comfort to all who believe in Christian liberty for the press, that I will by his permission quote a few words therefrom: "I here give you my word for it, that, whenever the C. F. C. must go into the hands of those who are opposed to 'free speech' or 'free press' my connection with it must end." But he does not forget, that, although all things are lawful, but all things are not profitable, therefore he adds, "the freedom of the press is not a liberty for every person to say anything and everything he may feel to write."

All right, brother, "on this line" my little help will continue to the end.

Oh, no, no,! we ought not to have liberty to call our Christian brother harsh and unkind epithets; but give us a "free press," to advocate everything taught in the gospel, and liberty to oppose everything taught that is not gospel. But scissor off all personal criticisms, and paste on only that which is love.

S. M. MINNICH.

O how blessed are they to whom it is given to walk in this light! Again, how miserable, wretched, and unhappy are they that spear their eyes at the coming of this comfortable light, and will not only not walk in it themselves, but also labor to the uttermost of their power to obscure and quench it, that it may appear and shine to none at all! "These are those people, which," as the prophet saith, "provoke God to anger. These are the lying and unfaithful children. These are the children that will not hear the law of the Lord." These are they which, "call evil good, and good evil, and darkness light, and light darkness, bitter sweet and sweet bitter." These are they "which are wise in their own eyes, and stand well in their own conceit."—Thomas Bacon.

MORN.

BY MISS J. L. GRAY.

Morn is the time to wake—
The eye-lids to unclose—
Spring from the arms of sleep and break
The fetters of repose;
Walk at the dewy dawn abroad,
And hold sweet fellowship with God.

Morn is the time to pray—
How lovely and how meet
To send our earliest thoughts away
Up to the mercy seat!
Ambassadors for us to claim
A blessing in our Master's name.

Morn is the time to sing—
How charming 'tis to hear
The mingling notes of nature ring
In the delighted ear!
And with that swelling anthem raise
The soul's fresh matin song of praise!

Morn is the time to sow
The seeds of heavenly truth,
While balmy breezes softly blow
Upon the soil of youth!
And look to thee, nor look in vain,
Our God, for sunshine and for rain.

Morn is the time to love—
As tendrils of the vine,
The young affections fondly rove,
And seek them where to twine!
Around Thyself, in Thine embrace,
Lord let them find their resting-place.

Morn is the time to shine—
When skies are clear and blue—
Reflect the rays of light divine,
As morning dew-drops do;
Like early stars, be early bright,
And melt away like them in light.

Morn is the time to weep,
O'er morning hours misspent—
Alas! how oft from peaceful sleep,
On folly madly bent.
We've left the straight and narrow road,
And wandered from our guardian God.

Morn is the time to think,
While thoughts are fresh and free,
Of life, just balanced on the brink
Of dark eternity!
And ask our souls if they are meet,
To stand before the judgment seat?

Morn is the time to die—
Just at the dawn of day,
When stars are fading in the sky,
To fade like them away—
But lost in light more brilliant far
Than ever merged the morning star.

Morn is the time to rise,
The resurrection morn—
Upspringing to the glorious skies,
On new-found pinions borne,
To meet a Savior's smile divine—
Be such ecstatic rising mine!

For the COMPANION.

Declension.

Christianity was plainly and conclusively illustrated by the precept and example of its Divine Founder. This was no doubt done, that all honest seekers after the true faith might be able to find it unmistakably, in the path trodden by the great Teacher; and to detect apostacies in churches, as well as in individuals, by their deviations from that path.

The first organization of the church partook in an eminent degree of the meekness and humility of Jesus, which was manifested, in one respect, by the simplicity and spirituality of their worship. This pure and humble faith, however, had its opponents in the body from the beginning; because pride, which is so natural to fallen man, impels false professors, always in the church, to imitate the customs, pomp and parade of surrounding spurious religions. Bearing the cross, which consists in nonconformity, non-resistance, long-suffering, forgiveness, humility, meekness, is so incongenial to the unregenerate and worldly minded, that a conflict is constantly going on in every church, and continues, if not checked, until all the peculiarities of "the faith once delivered to the saints" are destroyed, and the contest ends in a triumph for Satan and his cohorts. It is, however, not to be understood that none remain who are striving to live their faith, and to overcome the world in those organizations, which "have a name that they live but are dead." As in Sardis, there may be "a few names who have not defiled their garments" in congregations, which the Lord no longer recognizes collectively as a part of his church. These few faithful souls, amid the surrounding declension, are often counted worthy to be the nucleus, around which the spiritual Zion is rebuilt; for God always has had, and ever will have, a people upon the earth, "peculiar, and zealous of good works." The Lord's people, it is true, may be comparatively a very little flock, and the proud, the gay and the fashionable may despise and revile them, because of their very humble and plain clothing, and ask, "How much religion is there in dressing so odd from the rest of the world" just as they ask "How much religion is there in washing one another's feet in public, when each one could wash his own feet at home, and not be a spectacle and a laughing stock for the rest of the world?" The meek and lowly followers of Jesus, when reviled, revile not again; and if they answer the above questions at all, it will be in the words of their Lord and Master, "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." "If I have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet," "He that is ashamed of me and of my words, of him will I also be ashamed before my father and the holy angels." &c. When those who profess the religion of Christ, put on the fashionable garb of the world, and in unison with the world ask the former questions, they will very soon be ready secretly, at least, to propound the latter; for wearing the saints' garb and washing the saints' feet are equally repugnant to the proud heart.

The plain and logical inference is that the lowly rite of feetwashing will soon be performed in secret, and, finally, abandoned altogether, by any church whose ministers no longer bear a testimony against pride and fashion; because themselves practice the same things, and, consequently, those who are admitted to membership come in proud, and with all their tinsel, pomp of silks, feathers, flowers, ribbons and bon ton attire upon them; utterly despising God's humble people and ordinances. A church in this condition is evidently very similar to that at Ephesus; concerning which the apostle Paul prophesied to his son Timothy, the first bishop of that church, as follows: The time will come when they (the Ephesians) will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, (for pompous titles) and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." 2 Rim. 4: 3, 4 After this same Ephesian church had fallen to the deplorable condition described above, "the spirit of the seven churches" writes to her thus through the Revelator: "Remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of its place, unless thou repent." Rev. 2: 5.

If any arm of the Brotherhood should be in the "transition" state; gradually declining toward the proud and popular christianity of the times, by the adoption of customs and practice contrary to the gospel, and to the faith of the Brethren, thus drifting into the "itching ear" ministry, let those who are making themselves the instruments in bringing about this deplorable result, beware of the momentous responsibility they assume! It may be thought necessary to "cut off" the gangrened "arm," lest the whole body become infected and "perish". SILAS THOMAS.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Are We in Earnest?

Are we doing all that lies in our power to advance the cause of Christ? Are our hearts fully in the Savior's keeping? Do we realize the shortness of time, and the importance of working while it is day, as we ought? We talk of the soon coming of the Lord, and the necessity of preparing to meet him, but do we realize that these things are so? When I enter into self-examination, I feel that I am sadly deficient in almost everything that is requisite to perfect Christian character, yet I am unwilling to give up the struggle, knowing that the promise is only to those that endure unto the end; and I am sometimes led to cry out with earnestness of soul, "Teach me thy way, O Lord; I will walk in thy truth." Oh! for more consecration to the Master; for soon we shall be called to give an account of our stewardship; soon Jesus will come, attended by a retinue of angels, and if we hear him say, "Well done," it will be because we have done well.

Then how important that we walk in the footsteps of him who lived our example; live out the teachings of his word, that we may, at least, have eternal life, and dwell on the earth when it is made new. How careful we ought to be that our influence is cast on the side of right; for Jesus has said, "He that is not with me, is against me; and he that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad." (Matt. xii 30) Sad, indeed, would it be, if, after professing to love the Lord, our lives should not correspond with our profession, and we thus bring a reproach upon the cause of truth.

Oh! for grace to be humble, in all things showing ourselves a pattern of good works. In doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of us. "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

Then, if we are to be a peculiar people, we ought not to be conformed to this world, but be "transformed by the renewing of our mind, that we prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." If we have become addicted to habits that are injurious, been conformed to the fashions of this world, the word of God demands a reform. "He that striveth for the mastery, is temperate in all things." O! that we might overcome self in such a manner as to be willing to labor to elevate ourselves to the standard of truth, although it may place us under the necessity of cutting off some right-hand sin, and crush some cherished idol to atoms. May the Lord help us to break off from every sinful indulgence, for it is our iniquities that have separated between us and our God.

May we earnestly seek to be overcomers, remembering that Jesus has said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. 3. 21.—Sel.

Keep a Good Heart.

Never lose heart or stop praying because your boys are a little wild. While you sadly call to mind the things they have forgotten, you are ignorant of the things they remember. It is the fashion for boys to appear indifferent to the counsels of parents. They have an idea that it is rather the manly and the handsome thing to take good advice in a dogged sort of a way, just as they take medicine, and a very brave thing to dare your threat. All this is written in the code of boyhood. We can't quite say with Emerson, that it is the bad boy that makes the good man; and yet we have a great deal of sympathy with that overflowing spirit of youth, which is sometimes a little reckless, and which frequently leads into mischief. Just sit down, if you have such a son, and recall your own early days. It may be difficult for you, just now, when you are in middle life, to see the fun which the boy finds in what appears to you to be utterly foolish or perhaps wantonly evil; but if you will turn to the early chapters of your own biography, you will find yourself stopping up the spouts of the old country house, just to see the rain pour over like a water fall, and you will recall the fun of the old gentleman's embarrassment, as he rushed out into the rain bare-headed, to find the cause of the trouble, and thereby got an attack of rheumatism which laid him up for a couple of weeks. Well, your boy is going through the same experiences, and, by-and-by, he will regard it, as you do now, as an unutterably foolish thing, and wonder where in the world the fun was. The truth is that all these pranks are necessary to boyhood as measles. They are the result of natural animal spirits, which can no more be repressed than can the waters that come bubbling out of the sand. We remember that when we were very young, a wild colt presented his heels to us in such a forcible manner that, before our surprise had vanished, we found ourselves in a little, disgusted heap on the other side of a five rail fence. At the time, we thought it an unhorsely thing to do, and exceedingly like pelting the creature with stones. But he came up to the fence with such a demure and abashed look, and put his head between the rails, and snuffed at us in such repentant mood, that we concluded it was part of the necessary experience of the animal, and cheerfully forgave him. Now, boys are coltish. They never think of consequences, they have the fun of the thing in view.

Don't stop praying and praying hopefully, for your children, at such times. By keeping close to the boy's heart and trying to appreciate his side of the matter as well as your own, you will keep control of him. We know it is a terribly fatiguing thing to bring up a family of children, but just think what a fearful time your parents had with you, and then have patience. What we need, most of all, is to remember that there was a time when we were boys ourselves.—The working Church.

For the COMPANION.

Are We Known?

This is a serious question. We should ask ourselves, Are we recognized by the world? Do they know at a glance where we belong? We fear we are not all known, unless we tell. If this is a fact, it is a sad fact—sad in the extreme. If we have set out to be Christians, and it is not known without we tell it, such Christianity has not much depth, we fear, and is in danger of becoming sickly, and, without careful treatment, it may die. Each one can answer this for himself. We know that, if we have neglected to comply with the solemn vows we made at our baptism, and still go on in the ways and fashions of the world, we are not known by man; and we much fear that we are not known by our good Father above.

We might, it is true, pass along pretty smoothly through this life, by having to tell where we belong and what we are; but, alas! that will not be acceptable in the world to come. We have all made very solemn promises at our baptism, but we have not all lived up to them; and this is indeed very sad. When we make a promise to a party and then break it, we cause that party to lose confidence in us; consequently our reputation is not only soiled, but it is spoiled in the estimation of that party. And what do we think the result will be when we so solemnly, before man and to our God, make our baptismal promises, and then fail to comply, remembering too that our God is a just God? Truly there is danger in this. Dear brethren and sisters, if we have not as yet lived up to our solemn promises, let us at once comply and ever be diligent in the good work in which we have willingly enlisted. Let us not become tired and sickly, but ever be zealous and vigorous in the work of the Christian. If we are not persevering and diligent in our worldly affairs, we will not prosper nor accumulate a good living, much less wealth. Just so in Christianity. We are naturally inclined to grasp after wealth and worldly possessions; and if we are diligent in the cause of Christianity, it will be more and more natural for us to hunger and thirst after righteousness; and we will then be prosperous in obtaining the happiness and wealth that is due the Christian. Let us live so as to be known by all, and especially by our good Father of love and much mercy, is the true wish of your unworthy sister.

REBECCA SNAVELY.

Hudson, Ill.

For the COMPANION.

About Hymns.

When the Brethren's New Hymn Book was issued, I was pleased to find it contained the names of the authors of the different hymns, as far as known. When we read anything that does us good, we naturally like to know to whom we are indebted, and are always gratified to learn something of their lives and characters. I have recently read a beautiful little book, called, "Heart Life," written by Theodore L. Cuyler. It contains several chapters on four or five of the most popular hymns in the English language, and something about their authors. Perhaps I can give others a few moments pleasure by making some extracts from "Heart Life," and sending them to the COMPANION.

Of the author of the "Rock of Ages" Mr. Cuyler says: "Augustus Toplady was the son of a British officer. After Major Toplady's death, his widow took the lad Augustus on a visit to Ireland. While at Codymain, the boy of sixteen found his way into a barn, where an earnest but uneducated layman was preaching on the text, "Ye who sometime were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ." The homespun preacher built better than he knew; for his sermon converted the soul which gave to the church of God the "Rock of Ages." Let no man feel that he is doing a small thing when he is proclaiming Jesus and the great salvation, even to peasants in a cow house. Probably that obscure Irish preacher has overheard ten thousand echoes of his sermon in the heavenly world.

"Toplady was ordained to the ministry in 1762, and began to preach on the banks of Otter. His career was a short one, for he died at the age of thirty-eight. Toplady's hymn has been translated into almost every tongue. Dr. Pomeroy went into a church in Constantinople, where a company of Armenians were singing a hymn which so moved them that the tears were trickling down their cheeks. He inquired what they were singing? A man present translated the words, and lo! they were the dear old lines of 'Rock of Ages.' When Prince Albert of England was dying, he feebly murmured the sweet words of Toplady's hymn. And so it came about that the dying prince laid hold of those precious thoughts which had their original root in the rude discourse of an obscure layman in an Irish barn."

Mr. Cuyler makes some further very beautiful remarks about this favorite hymn; but the whole is too long to copy into the COMPANION.

Charles Wesley, author of "Jesus lover of my soul," and many other hymns in our hymn book, was born at Epworth, England. Mr. Cuyler says of him:

"Charles Wesley was a born poet. Like Toplady, he was all nerve and fire and enthusiasm. God gave him a musical ear, intense emotions, ardent affections, and a glowing piety that never grew cold. He ate, drank, slept and dreamed nothing but hymns! He must have been the ready writer of at least four thousand. One day, while on his itineracy, his pony stumbled and threw him off. The only record he makes of the accident in his diary is this, "My companions thought I had broken my neck; but my leg only was bruised, my hand sprained, and head stunned, which spoiled my making hymns until—next day.' Wesley found his inspiration in 'every hedge.' For example, when he was preaching to a crowd of rude stone-cutters and quarry-men at Portland, he turned his appeal into metre, and improvised a hymn in which occur the vigorous lines,

> "Come, O thou all-victorious Lord,
> Thy power to us make known;
> Strike with the hammer of Thy word,
> And break these hearts of stone!"

The poet Cowper was subjected to seasons of deep despondency. At such times he would not touch a Bible for months, and to hear his friends speak on the subject of religion would disturb him extremely, although at other times he delighted to honor his Lord. Mr. Cuyler says of him, and of that beautiful hymn the brethren so often sing:

"Cowper sung in one of his inspired hours of joy, when the cloud of melancholy lifted from his soul:—

"There is a fountain filled with blood."

This hymn is saturated with grateful love for the dear, dying Lamb. Its author glories only in the Cross of Christ, and lifts with trembling hand his crown of adoration, and places it above the crown of thorns on Jesus' brow. Although Cowper was immeasurably the greatest living poet then in Britain, he confesses that his is but a "poor lisping, stammering tongue" to sing of redeeming love. He promises to himself "a nobler, sweeter song" when he gets his well-tuned harp in the oratorio of heaven."

"The history of Charles Wesley's incomparable hymn would fill a volume. Millions have sung it, and will be singing it when the millenial morn breaks."

"Mrs. Adams, authoress of 'Nearer my God to Thee.' was born at Cambridge, England, in February, 1805. Her father, Mr. Benjamin Flower, was the editor of a weekly paper. At what time she caught the inspiration to compose that one immortal hymn, which is now sung around the globe, we have never learned. Probably it was some season of peculiar trial, when the bruised spirit emitted the odors of child-like submission to a chastening Father. It must have oozed from a bleeding heart. His hymn first appeared in a volume of sacred lyrics, published by a Mr. Fox, in England, about the year 1841. The authoress did not live to catch the echoes of the fame it was to bring, for she died in 1819, at the age of forty-four. Last year Professors Smith, Hitchcock, and Park, as they wound their way down the foot-hills of Mount Lebanon, came in sight of a group of fifty Syrian students, standing in a line, singing in full chorus. They were the students of the new College at Beirut, at Abieh, and they were singing in Arabic to the air of Bethany. As the professors drew nearer, they caught the sublime words:

"Nearer, my God, to Thee, Nearer to Thee."

Several years ago a friend, in Illinois, sent me a beautiful piece of poetry, apparently cut from a newspaper. Mr. Cuyler, in "Heart Life," speaks of the same hymn, and says Henry F. Lyte, a minister of the Episcopal Church, wrote it. He says: "Lyte's health failed, and in 1847 he was obliged to sail for Nice, where he soon fell asleep in Jesus. The last Sabbath he spent with his flock was the day of communion. Toward evening he handed a friend a manuscript containing eight exquisite verses. They proved to be his own death song of holy faith. Life's brief day was ebbing swiftly to its close. The lay he sang is the most pathetic in our modern hymnology."

Probably very few of the readers of the COMPANION have ever seen it, I will therefore copy it. Mr. Cuyler says the original manuscript contained eight verses. In "Heart Life" there are only seven. My copy has eight. It is so very beautiful that but few can object to its length.

"Abide with me! Fast falls the eventide:
The darkness deepens. Lord with me abide;
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless oh, abide with me!

Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day:
Earth's joys grow dim; its glories pass away;
Change and decay in all around I see;
O Thou, who changest not, abide with me!

Not a brief glance I beg, a passing word;
But as Thou dwell'st with Thy disciples Lord—
Familiar, condescendingly, patient, free—
Come, not sojourn, but abide with me!

Come not in terrors, as King of kings;
But kind and good, with healing in Thy wings,
Tears for all woes, a heart for every plea,
Come, friend of sinners, and thus abide with me!

Thou on my head in early youth didst smile,
And, though rebellious and perverse meanwhile,
Thou hast not left me, oft as I left Thee;
On to the close, O Lord, abide with me!

I need Thy presence every passing hour;
What but Thy grace can foil the tempter's power;
Who like Thyself my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, oh, abide with me!

I fear no foe with Thee at hand to bless;
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness
Where is death's sting? where, grave, thy victory?
I triumph still, if Thou abide with me!

Hold Thou Thy cross before my closing eyes;
Shine through the gloom, and point me to the skies,
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee,
In life and death, O Lord, abide with me!"

The hymn, in the The Brethren's Hymn Book, commencing "When Jesus Christ was here below," was written by brother Daniel Reichard, for many years a minister in the Manor Church, Maryland. He died twelve or thirteen years ago at a ripe old age, and lies buried in the grave-yard at the Manor meeting-house. As our new book contains several other hymns on feet-washing, his, perhaps, is not sung as frequently as in former times; but let him have the honor of having supplied a want the brotherhood felt years ago. If the compiler of our new book had known the author, doubtless his humble name would have appeared, with that of Watts on either side.

E. WILLIAMS.

For the COMPANION.

Kindness to Animals.

While reading the COMPANION I saw the editor's call for essays on "deeds of charity," and "works of righteousness;" both being subjects of which a great deal might be written and spoken, if wisdom and the grace of God were in store. The latter engaged my mind for some time past, of which an incident may have been the cause. While at work, a man wanted to haul a load with his horse. The horse pulled it but let it stand again, when three or four of us helped to push and the driver, with stick in hand, "pounded him." The horse did not pull, and we could not push it. I told the man to stand aside; went up to the horse and spoke kindly to him; stroked his neck and patted him on the head, and then, in a gentle voice, told him to come, and he did come, and the load also.

Now what I want to say with this is, for us to be careful how we treat dumb animals. Perhaps if we would sometimes use more kindness to our horses and other animals, they would become attached to us, and we could do anything with them in their power: they would feel that they had a friend to care for them, and not a tyrant who beat and cruelly drives them, and asks unreasonable things of them. We know, that every kind of beast, and of serpents, and of birds, and things in the sea is tamed, and has been tamed by mankind; and I undertake to say, by kindness more than by power.

We have a law which punishes cruelty to animals, but, like most laws, it is not properly enforced, for if it were, we would not see so many horses used the way they are. "The righteous man regardeth the life of his beast," he does not let them go "half starved," with almost nothing but skin and bones, abusing them for things which they cannot understand. We can do a great deal with kindness; but to govern our temper takes some self-denial on our part; but if we can keep it under our control, we are "mightier than he who taketh a city."

If our animals could speak to us, sometimes, would they not tell us things of which we must be ashamed? But the animals have no reasoning powers like man. How careful ought we therefore to be, that we make good use of the superior wisdom which God has endowed us with.

Be kind to your animals; for think how much good they do for us. Last fall when the horse disease was raging, we found out what the horse was doing for us: business was almost brought to a stand. But alas! man is so forgetful, if God wants to teach and make us think of our sins.

One word more: It is a saying that a child is what you make it. So with the horse; if you whip and abuse him, he will be as his master—he will resist with all his might; but if treated kindly, he will naturally be gentle and of a kind disposition. Brethren the field to do good is large, and we will try and do all in our power.

CYRUS BUCHER.

In closing the eyes for the nightly rest, it is good to say: "He giveth his beloved sleep;" and in opening them, when night is past, to say: "When I wake I am still with thee."

Many a one hardens and sharpens, through the opposing or grinding of unkindly circumstances, which else might have been gentle, restful, round with grace in lineament and soul, through nestling among loving influences.

Good works cannot go before regeneration. Effectual grace is that which builds the soul into an habitation of God. Holy tempers and holy obedience are the furniture of the house, and a house must be built before it can be furnished.—Toplady.

One by One.

One by one the sands are flowing,
One by one the moments fall;
Some are coming, some are going,
Do not strive to grasp them all.

One by one thy duties wait thee;
Let thy whole strength go to each;
Let no future dreams elate thee;
Learn thou first what these can teach.

One by one bright gifts from heaven,
Joys are sent thee here below;
Take them readily when given,
Ready, too, to let them go.

One by one thy griefs shall meet thee,
Do not fear an armed band;
One will fade as others greet thee,
Shadows passing through the land.

Do not look at life's long sorrow;
See how small each moments pain;
God will help thee for to-morrow,
So each day begins again.

Every hour that fleets so slowly
Has its task to do or bear;
Luminous the crown, and holy,
If thou set each gem with care.

Family Religion.

BY H. DANIEL.

"I will walk within my house with a perfect heart."—Ps. ci. 2.

There is no scene on earth more sacred, none more tender and beautiful, than a family in the act of devotion. Secluded from the outer world, with a domestic life of entire sympathy and unity in wants, desires, affections, aims, interests and hopes, they together recognize their dependence upon their Father in Heaven, confess to him their feelings and their needs, seek his favor and guidance and commit themselves in all things to his gracious providence. Together they read his word for instruction in duty, for consolation in trial, for the knowledge of that higher life to which they aspire, for the perfection of their love and joy, for the hope of that blessedness complete and eternal, to which they look forward in their Father's house above. With hearts and voices united, they sing the praise of him, who, as Creator, Preserver, Redeemer, brings them under daily obligations to his love and grace. Here husband and wife, parent and child, master and servant, all are one in acknowledging the same favors, confessing the same helplessness, supplicating the same mercy. And yet how many families throughout this Christian land are there to be found in which God does not dwell—families in which there is no "church in the house," no altar from whence arises the daily sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving. How unlike David are such in their walk within the sacred precincts of their domicils. Amidst all the great duties of a public life, he did not neglect his duties as a king and priest in his own family, but resolved to "walk within his house with a perfect heart." The walk of a man is the tenor of his life, and he who would walk within his house with a perfect heart, must perform the duties devolving upon him as the head of the family, with an upright, undefiled, sincere and whole heart. And the pious man, by thus walking within his little dominion, secures unto himself and unto his household those inestimable blessings which God deigns to vouchsafe unto "the habitation of the just."

It is of vast importance that heads of families, controlling children and servants, should have good rules for the government of their own conduct. It is not enough to put on our religion when we go abroad and appear before men, but we must govern ourselves by it in our individual capacity and in our families. There is, too frequently, a great difference between a man's walk before the world and his walk within his house. It is, apparently, easier for most men to walk with a perfect heart in the church, or even in the world, than in their own families. And yet a man's holiness, righteousness and wisdom are put to the proof, not by his public life, but by his behavior to his domestics, with whom he more frequently converseth. Many a man, who stands well in the church and is highly esteemed among men, is known by his wife, his children or his servants, to be anything else than an exemplary Christian. Before the world he appears prudent, just and good; but within his house, imprudent, unjust and wicked. Public opinion weighs more with him than the opinion of his family. Hence he studiously deceives the public by counterfeiting religion when appearing before men, but throws off the mask before his domestics. His family, influenced either by natural affection or a fear of resentment on his part, conceal his real character, and thus, perhaps, unconsciously helping him to deceive the world. But he who thus uses religion as a cloak, though unknown to men, is fully known to him who is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, who will appoint him a portion with the hypocrites, where hope is a stranger and where mercy can never enter. The life of professing Christians within the family circle should compare favorably with that in every other relation of life.

The walk of man within his house includes his whole conduct, both civil and religious, in the bosom of his own family. There, could we follow him, we should be able to develop his real character; for his temper, words and works are generally without disguise within the family circle. The inmates of his abode witness from day to day his rising and lying down, his going out and coming in, and all the steps he takes, both in temporal things and in those things which relate to the eternal world; and hence his deportment here should be of such a nature as to exert an influence for good upon his entire household. He should walk before them with a perfect heart, in genuine simplicity, teaching the way to happiness here and hereafter by precept and example. A pious man professes obedience to God, love and respect to his family, and a desire to do good unto all men. The sincerity of his profession appears evident in his daily walk, and conversation within his house and those who know him best admire him most. Under his roof God is honored, peace and happiness abound, and plans of public usefulness are formed and efforts are put forth abroad for the amelioration of mankind. David resolved to give his family a proof that he loved and served God himself, and hence he would demean himself in such a manner that they should not hear anything from his lips, nor see anything in his life which clashed with the laws of God. He would harmonize his temper and conduct in private with the profession which he made before men. How admirable is consistency between profession and practice! Where this is found, calumny itself cannot fix a stain.

Thus the man who walks within his house with a perfect heart, is a bright example of religion to his family. They see religion exemplified, and finely illustrated, in every action of his life. All its divine charms appear in their native lustre and produce admiration and love. There cannot be a greater blessing to any family than a master who conducts himself upon these principles. Compared with this, the finest gold, in point of real value, is but as dross.

Such a man will institute his family those forms of religion which may appear best calculated to lead his household to God. He will erect the family altar, and appoint stated hours for conducting family worship, to consist in the perusal of the sacred Scriptures, in singing hymns of praise, and in offering up prayer and supplication to God. The devotional exercises are calculated to impress themselves in an indelible manner upon the youthful mind. There are few memories that are so fresh and powerful in after years as the memories of the household altar. There are those who can travel back over the path of forty or more years, and recall the very tones of a father's voice, as he reverently read the Bible and devoutly prayed, surrounded by his children; how faithfully he taught them lessons of Christian truth and duty, in those thoughtless days of youth, and who then bless his memory for what they did not appreciate in earlier life. We believe that the memories of Christian parents, and the early associations of a Christian scarcely ever die out in the heart. An eminent divine (Dr. Adams) narrates the following incident: "In the Cathedral of Limerick, there hangs a chime of bells which were cast in Italy, by an enthusiast in his trade, who fixed his home in the monastery, where they first hung, that he might daily enjoy their sweet and solemn music. In some political revolution the bells were taken away to some distant land, and their maker himself became a refugee and an exile. His wanderings brought him, after many years, to Ireland. On a calm and beautiful evening, as the vessel which bore him floated on the placid bosom of the Shannon, suddenly the evening chimes pealed from the Cathedral Tower; his practiced ear caught the sweet sound, and he knew that his lost treasures were found. His early home, his old friends, his beloved native land, all the best associations of his life, were in those sounds. He laid himself back in the boat, crossed his arms upon his breast, and listened to the music. The boat reached the wharf, but still he lay there, silent and motionless. They spoke to him, but he did not answer. They went to him, but his spirit had fled. The tide of memories that came vibrating through his heart at that well-known chime, had snapped its strings!"

And, so, sometimes, in after life, when the feet of the wayward man have strayed away from the home of his youth, and his heart has wandered far from his father's God, some memory of the past, like the sweet, sad melody of the evening chimes, may wake long-slumbering echoes, and stir long-sealed fountains, and a father's counsels and a mother's prayers, will come up again from the sacred burial-places of the past with wondrous power to melt and win the wayward heart.

And hence every family ought to be a little Church of Jesus Christ. The father should be its pastor, conducting its daily worship and leading the dear circle in the way of truth and duty. Every tie which binds one living heart to another, should be made stronger and more tender by the influence of a common tie to Jesus. Such a household will constitute a happy home—an earthly paradise. Their circumstances may be humble and their lot may be lowly, but if they have Christ in the family, there will always be sunshine and peace. That house cannot secure the highest domestic joy which, like the inn at Bethlehem, has no room for Jesus.

The devotions conducted by the man who walks in his house with a perfect heart are accompanied with prudent and interesting instructions upon general and important subjects, and in addition thereto, a pious man often instructs each individual of his family apart, in those particular duties which are absolutely and essentially necessary to salvation. His own mind being richly stored with religious knowledge, he imparts it freely to every one who is placed under his care, that none may perish for lack of knowledge. These instructions are followed by judicious commands. Of Abraham it was said, "I know him that he will command his children, and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord." Parental authority, wisely directed, has great influence upon children. A pious parent insists on outward decorum, while he recommends the life and power of vital godliness. He cannot give spiritual life to his family, but he uses the means, leaving the rest to God, believing that he is faithful who has promised. If commands and well-timed advice fail, he adds reproof and correction. Solomon says, "He that spareth the rod hateth his son, but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes." These corrections, however, are prudently administered. They are inflicted at the right time, proceed from proper motives, and are proportioned to the wrong which has been committed. Where there is a want of caution, in these respects, the designs of corrective punishment are often defeated.

He who thus walks in his house with a perfect heart, secures unto his family blessings both temporal and spiritual. A family governed by a pious man, commonly prospers in temporal things. Every member of the family is trained up in the habits of industry, frugality and honesty—habits which promote health and wealth, and every comfort that this world can afford. Afflictions, for wise reasons, may be laid upon such a family, but, in general, they abound in the enjoyment of necessary good things. "The young lions do lack, and suffer hunger; but they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing."

At the same time religion frequently takes deep root in such families. They learn to love, honor and obey their Creator, to be just in their dealings with men, and to be temperate, sober and chaste. There is more truth in the words of the wise man, than many parents will allow. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." There may be a few exceptions to this rule, but generally a sanctified religious education produces the most happy results.

These things render a family useful in the world. Those who are connected with them, whether by blood, by marriage, by friendship, by commerce, have cause to bless God. Their influence is extensively felt, and many are induced to follow their example. In this way, religion spreads from house to house, and the happy effects of one man's piety, through the blessing of God, may reach thousands. Reputation necessarily follows piety and usefulness. All, except the most worthless, both think and speak well of such families. They stand high in the esteem of wise and good men; the tongue of slander is silenced, and the vilest of men secretly admire. Who would not wish to share these excellencies? The artful policy of wicked families to keep up their reputation, proves how much real worth is esteemed, even by those who are not diligent in excelling herein.

But what is of most importance, God approves of such families. He looks down from heaven, his holy habitation, with smiles of approbation. They are lovely in his sight, and are favored with special presence. When Jesus was upon earth, he honored the pious family of Mary and Martha with much of his company, and the special presence of God, like the ark of the covenant in the house of Obed-edom, will evermore secure such a blessing. God, who approves of such families, sends down upon them the choicest blessings, both of providence and grace. He supplies their wants, protects them by night and by day, and will finally call them up to join the family in heaven. There their piety, friendship and happiness will be perfected. Death may separate them for a few years, but they will meet again, in a happier world, to part no more.

Heads of families suffer the word of exhortation. Much, very much, depends on you as regards the future of the Church and the world. Your families are either blessed or cursed through your instrumentality, and they will exert an influence for good or evil upon others. Now begin to act with respect to the great and weighty charge committed to your care, with a wise reference to that account which you shall have to render in the day of judgment. Success may not always follow your well-meant endeavors to promote the happiness of your families, but make the attempt in the name of the Lord, and say, with pious Joshua, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

In your house let Jesus dwell;
In his strength strive to excel;
Your children train for bliss on high,
To dwell with you above the sky.

—Church Advocate.

Water in Jerusalem.

At last they have water in Jerusalem. The Pasha in connection with the mayor of Jerusalem, finally succeeded in repairing the old water pipes from Ain-el-Chaelo, on the road to Bethlehem and Hebron to Jerusalem, and establishing four public fountains in the city, supplying the people with fresh water. The Arabs who carried water into the city did all in their power to destroy the works as fast as they had been repaired, but at last the Pasha has succeeded in managing them. Also the railroad from Joppa to Jerusalem will be finished next year.—The Israelite.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Nov. 4, 1873.

Editorial Correspondence.

CLEAR LAKE, IOWA.
October 18, 1873.

On Wednesday 8th inst. we left home and set out upon our long expected journey westward. Shortly after midnight we arrived at Lima, Ohio. Brother Quinter met us at the station and conducted us to a hotel, where we lodged together, and held an interview, upon matters relating to our business. On Thursday morning at 9, we again took the cars, and at 6 p. m. arrived at Chicago. At 9 the same evening we took the cars, on the Burlington and Missouri River R. R. and next morning, Friday, arrived at Burlington, about half an hour too late for connection. In the evening took cars on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnessota R. R., and arrived at Waterloo at about 4 on Saturday morning. Here we were met by our indefatigable brother, Michael Reber. Brother W. J. H. Bauman, of Nora Springs, also joined us here, having come by the other end of the road. Brother Reber took us to his home, where we were entertained and refreshed. Thence we were conveyed to the Brethren's meeting-house, in the South Waterloo congregation. Here we met many brethren and sisters whose faces we recognized. Public services began at 10 o'clock. Foreign ministers present. W. J. H. Bauman, Abraham and Solomon Stamey, H. P. Strickler, J. E. Eikenberry, Benjamin Ellis and Peter Forney. The last shall be first, and accordingly brother Forney took the lead, read 2 Tim. 4 and spoke principally from the words "Preach the word." But we thought he preached more of things not found in the word than of those in it. When we take those words for our text, we ought by all means confine ourselves to the preaching of the word, at least during that sermon. Other brethren followed, until the time was sufficiently occupied. Then the meeting was dismissed, and the people invited to dinner. Eating occupied several hours, as there was abundant provision for all. At about half past 3 the people again assembled, and services were held which continued about two hours. In the evening were the communion services, and everything passed off very pleasantly, and we hope the members present were edified and profited. We lodged at the house of brother Wm. Miller, near by.

Sunday (12) forenoon there were services at the same place, which were largely attended. In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the Pleasant Hill school-house. At both these places, a Pennsylvania brother served the brethren. In the evening we attended a social meeting at the house of brother Reber. This meeting was quite interesting, and we could not help approving of such meetings. In order that the brethren might judge for themselves in regard to them, we will report the proceedings of this meeting. The exercises were opened in the usual order, singing, exhortation and prayer. Then a chapter was read from the Bible. Then liberty was given to any one to ask a question that might have been suggested by any portion of the scripture read. None being offered, the leader of the meeting proceeded to ask questions, which some one would answer. Liberty was granted to give farther answers, or make corrections. Then other questions were propounded, and similarly disposed of. After time enough has been used in this way, some one delivers an exhortation, and the meeting is closed by singing and prayer.

Monday, (13) brother Reber took us to Waterloo. Here I had engaged to have an interview with brother John R. Holsinger, of Illinois, whom we had met quite unexpectedly at the meeting. Our company dined at brother John A. Beuchley's, where we spent several pleasant hours. Brother John Holsinger and I also visited sister Sarah Stuber, who is a first cousin to us. She is in reasonable health, and her family, except her eldest son, who is suffering from a wound received by the accidental discharge of a gun, but is convalescent. The family is very poor, and in need of the sympathy of the community. We lodged at brother Martin Beuchley's, who were our traveling companions on our last year's western tour to Minnesota. Had a pleasant interview.

Tuesday (14) brother Beuchley took us to our aunt, Mrs. John Brown, about six miles north of Waterloo. Here we also met our uncle, Michael Ritz, who, with his family, is sojourning with them, preparatory to moving to Russel county, Kansas. Spent the night pleasantly with them.

Wednesday (15) uncle Michael took us to friend John Hildebrand's for dinner. Sorry our old friend was not at home. Thence uncle took us to brother Henry Gochenour's where we lodged. In this family I am quite familiar, having been there on a former visit.

Thursday, 16. Sister Gochenour took us to brother —— Moore's, residing with brother Huff's. Brother Moore is very severely afflicted, and has been for a number of years. At present he suffers excruciating pains, and is altogether helpless; and yet he has a perfect use of his mind and speech. Elder E. K. Beuchly and wife, and several sisters besides our company, met us here. Had a season of prayer with brother Moore. And, brethren and sisters, we sincerely entreat you to send up your fervent prayers in his behalf.

We then repaired to brother E. K. Beuchley's for dinner. After a friendly intercourse, brother B. took us to Waterloo. Thence by cars to Green, Cold Water congregation. Preached in the Brethren's new meeting-house, in Green. Had a respectable assembly and good attention. Elder John F. Eikenberry and brother John E. Eikenberry minister, were present. Elder Ellis was not present, likely owing to infirmity. Here the Brethren have a very good two-story, stone meeting-house. It is not quite finished, and not nearly paid for. We hope the church will not suffer itself to be long in debt. We were kindly entertained at brother Aaron Moss's.

Friday 17. Took the train at about 5 in the morning, so that we did not get to see much of Green, but left it with a favorable impression. On the train brother and sister Reber joined us, who with sister Lewis Berkley, who had accompanied us from Waterloo, increased our company to five persons, besides two little girls. At Nora Junction brother Wm. Workman met us and conveyed us to his house, about half a mile distant, and kindly entertained us. Soon after 11 o'clock we took the cars, and in a short time we landed at Mason City. Here we had a few hours to wait, but did not receive much benefit from it, on account of a heavy shower of rain. At about four o'clock we again took the cars, and in a half hour arrived at the place of our heading. Clear Lake is a beautiful sheet of fresh, clear water, from one to two miles wide. But the weather was too stormy and cold to allow us to enjoy it. The elements appeared to be against us, as we had no such weather since we left home. Well let it be so; we made the best of it. We remained over night, and are leaving at 8: 30 of the 19th.

Salutation.

"If ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others?" Matt. 5 : 47.

From the latter part of our text it seems that the disciples are expected to do more than others do; and, in fact, before this, in the same discourse, the Savior said to his disciples, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." God deals with his rational creatures on the principles of equity and justice; and hence, to whom much is given, of him much will be required.

That God has done more for those who live under the present dispensation than he did for any other people, is a fact that none will doubt, and therefore it is but just that we should do more than others. "God who at sundry times, and in divers manners spake unto the fathers by the prophets, hath, in these last days, spoken unto us by his Son." The Son spake as never man had spoken: he spake with authority. "It hath been said," and, "ye have heard that it hath been said," were followed by his authoritative, "But I say unto you." The law enunciated by him was higher, nobler, purer than that under the former dispensation. "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, (See Ex. 20 : 24, Lev. 24 : 17–22;) but I say unto you, That ye resist not evil." "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy, (see Lev. 19 : 18, Deut. 23: 6;) but I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." Matth. 5 : 38—45.

Here is announced the great principle of philanthropy by which the disciples of Christ must be actuated. This is the law of Christ, and it can not be a matter of indifference. This law must be observed, to constitute us children of God. If we are his children, the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit; and if we possess the love of God, or are possessed by it, we will be governed by it—we will love what God loves, and labor, to the extent of our ability and means, to accomplish his purposes. Oh! for more of that love, that we may indeed be the children of God. Our blessings are rich and abundant, our law is perfect, and our privileges are all that could be desired; and therefore we ought to do more than others.

"Then should the question oft recur—
What do we more than others do?
How do we show that we prefer
The things above to things below?

"Where is the holy walk that suits
The name and character we bear?
And where are seen those heavenly fruits
That show we're not what once we were?"

Among the things in which the disciples of Christ are expected to do more than others is that of saluting more than their brethren only. To salute is, (1) "To address with expressions of kind wishes; to greet; to hail." (2) "Hence, to greet with a kiss; to greet with a wave of the hand."—Webster.

There are different methods of salutation; and to say that we are to salute those that are not our brethren, is not saying that we must salute them as brethren, nor that we should salute them in the same manner. In fact, reason alone should teach us that the salutation should be suitable to the true relation that persons sustain to each other, and to the emotions that are to be expressed. If the relation of brethren in Christ and the pure, strong, and holy love that they bear to each other, is to be expressed, the "holy kiss," or "kiss of (love) charity," is the proper form of salutation. See Rom. 16 : 16; 1 Pet 5 : 14, et alibi.

When ordinary friendship, or the love which is borne to neighbors, is to be expressed, any of the ordinary forms—the friendly nod or smile, the wave or shake of the hands, or the "Good morning" or "How do you do?"—would be a natural, suitable, and proper form of salutation. Thus should Christians salute more than their brethren only. Even enemies may be thus saluted; and we dare not allow either pride or anger, or any other evil passion, to hinder us from performing this duty.

When persons are at a distance, they may salute each other, by expressions of their friendship or love, either by writing, or by gifts as tokens.

We add, in conclusion, that in ordinary meetings there should be ordinary greetings; hence the kiss should be reserved for extraordinary occasions.

J. W. B.

The Brethren's Almanac for 1874.

We are now ready to receive orders for the Brethren's Almanac for 1874. The Almanacs will not be sent out before the middle of November; but orders will be entered as received, and then filled as entered. The Almanac will contain the most complete list of the names and addresses of our ministers ever published; and besides, it will contain a number of interesting Biographical Sketches, and other interesting matter. Orders should be accompanied by the cash.

Terms: Single copy, 10 cents; six copies, 40 cts; twelve copies, 75 cts.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

SIX ROADS, PA.
October 9, 1873.

DEAR COMPANION:

Our lovefeast is over, and we can truly say we had a season of refreshment.

On Friday, the 3rd inst., the brethren and sisters came together from far and near. The ministering brethren from other churches were, Elders Joseph Berkey and Jacob Holsopple, from Shade, Stephen and David Hildebrand, from Conemaugh, and Brice Sell, from Duncansville. They all gave us very wholesome food. May the Lord reward them in eternity for the earnest labor they have performed while here; and we hope the word preached will not return without doing its purposed work of the Lord. On the next day, 4th, one soul became willing to follow the Lord's example to be baptized as an evidence of faith that she was willing to obey the Lord, and work out her soul's salvation while it is called to day. We continued our meeting till Monday evening, in the meeting house where the lovefeast was. The preachers all left on Monday but brother Stephen Hildebrand. He had meeting on Tuesday evening in Pleasantville, and on Wednesday evening in the Quaker Valley, about 3 miles north-east of Schellsburg. He left to-day, Oct. 9th, for James' Creek. We had a very fine series of meetings, and hope much good may be the result from the word preached by the beloved brethren while with us.

THOMAS S. HOLSINGER.

DEAR COMPANION: We had our lovefeast at Duncansville, on Tuesday Oct. 7th; and next day preaching by brother John Holsinger, from Woodbury, Pa., George W. Brumbaugh, from Clover Creek, Pa., and brother W. H. Quinn, from Tyrone, Pa. There was a good turnout of the brethren and sisters, and also of spectators; and there was very good order.

I thought the preaching was very good. There were two souls baptized. I think that some of the good seed has fallen in good ground. The Scriptures of divine truth inform us, that there is more joy in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than over ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance. Then why should we not rejoice when sinners turn to God?

One year ago, Oct. the 18th, I was baptized, and I am very thankful to a kind Providence, that He has turned me from hell to Heaven. I enjoyed myself very well among the brethren and sisters. It was the first time I ever had the privilege of attending a communion meeting with the Brethren. Thanks be to God for it. I met with many dear brethren and sisters, formed the acquaintance of brother S. Cox, and many others; also had the pleasure of a conversation with brother George Brumbaugh. My dear sisters and brethren, you have my sincere and hearty thanks. I shall always feel an interest in you, and not cease to pray that God may be with you and bless you.

L. A. ENGLE.

Duncansville, Pa.

Answer to Query.

Brother Holsinger:

As you did not answer the query of brother Chamberlain, I suppose you left it for "some other brother." Let me be the other brother and answer "yankee fashion" by other queries. How can a Sunday school picnic be worldly conformity? When did the world have a Sunday-school picnic?

Brother Chamberlain takes it for granted that Brethren's children should be distinguished from other children, by some particular mark. How did the children of the fishermen of Galilee differ from other fishermen's children? How was Peter's fisher's coat different from other fisher's coats? Was not the one great thing in which the apostles differed from other men, after all, the same as the one thing in which Mary and Martha differed—love for the Master?

If brother Chamberlain has been with a Sunday-school picnic and sinned, had he not better repent of his sin, rather than growl at those who went and glorified God in it?

Yours truly,

ABEL T. SHRIVER.

Some Thoughts.

In Vol. 9, No. 40, by J. Zuck, Jr., are the following words: "A truly religious man is all the better and the more influential and useful for being refined and educated." This, with some of the preceding arguments of our brother, argues, that the more classically educated and polished this lump of clay is, the more useful and influential it will be. Do we not all know that these things are highly esteemed among men? Are not men grasping for refined, well-polished education every day? Then are they an abomination in the sight of God. "And I saw," says the Revelator, "three unclean spirits, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast and out of the mouth of the false prophet." "Three unclean spirits" —diabolical, political and educational, or, to be more plain, false education—that education which leads away from, not to the simplicity of Christ. Satan uses this weapon very much to the destruction of unsteady man. "Just come up into my fine parlor and learn so much that you can point out to those humble, old men and women yonder that they need not be so particular; just polish the matter so that they will fall into this luxurious place too." Such are some of the tempter's arguments.

"The need of having a good educational institution among us, in order that we may hold and develop, not only the intellect that now is in the church, and that seeks educational facilities, but also that which we can draw into the church by this agency, and by this alone." Truly this is putting the matter very strongly. The church is the bride—is very closely connected to Christ.—yea, is Christ's, and He saith, "No man cometh to me except the Father draw him." And our young brother tells us, that "we can draw them" by education. Dear brother, let us be more zealous in the meek and lowly ways of our kind Savior, and our minds will not find time to invent drawing processes. Bear in mind, that I understand you to desire an institution of learning where a classical education can be received; for an institution where all the Brethren's children could attend is an impossibility. Then we fully understand, that we need "a good educational institution among us, in order that we may hold and develop," &c.; that is to say, where a few may become "refined and useful," and these few be sent out to "draw" sinners to Christ. We observe, and that with profound gratitude, the tens of thousands of free schools located throughout this vast country, where every boy and girl may receive a good common education; an education that will be sufficiently firm and strong to enable them to read the words of eternal truth with wisdom and understanding. With us in the west there does not seem to be very much difference manifested in the "want of the intellectual part of our being"; and it is worthy of note, that the great majority of our most useful, meek, and lowly ministering brethren never received more than a common education. They hold forth the self-denying doctrine of Christ with power, using not only "the sword of the spirit," but very intelligible language.

And here are our dear old "threescore and ten" brethren, who never had the one-tenth part of the educational facilities that their grandchildren have, and they are able to give most excellent advice; and their knowledge of the Scriptures is such that any of us more highly favored ones would love to possess. The great trouble is, we cram our minds with too much unpalatable food; there is scarcely any room left for the primitive order of God's house to lodge in.

Look abroad, and note how almost every so-called Christian society has been led into the pit of destruction by that "refined education." The first thing to be deliberated upon by them is to save others. When this thought arises, we should ask ourselves if we are healed. Why, then, this continual desire to establish "missions," "Sunday-schools," "Classical Institutes," and not bring ourselves into subjection? If we would deny ourselves of many of the superfluous decorations of our bodies, thus forsaking idolatry; give the meek and lowly followers of Christ no trouble, but all strive to adorn our profession with reverence, our preaching would be so forcible that none could gainsay it. But when we, who are young in years and young in our profession, attempt to teach our humble fathers that they are practicing the self-denying principles of our blessed Savior in a manner that is unnecessary,—that they are too humble—that they do not fully understand the will of God, we indirectly say we are wiser than they are; hence we become proud and boastful.

Oh! that we may humble ourselves under "the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt us in due season"; then God will add unto us wisdom through the present plain facilities for improving our minds.

To be concerned about the welfare of others is right; but that the world will be converted with present agencies is nowhere promised in divine truth. Sixty generations have come and gone, and during this time the most mighty eloquence has been used to set the world aright, and it has failed. In "these latter days" what do we behold? In the midst of the most highly favored communities scores are 'without God and without hope." How frightfully prevalent, and confessedly on the increase, are worldliness, selfishness, and crimes of the deepest dye. The professing churches of our time are filled with the foulest spirit of sectarianism, jealousy, unkindness, and love for preeminence. And yet these professing churches are led and governed by men renowned for their classical education; they are so allied to the world that no distinction is observable. They need themselves to be converted, for ungodliness, hypocrisy, and atheism hold high carnival in their midst.

And what has done all this? To a candid observer, and the simple child of God, there is but this answer: A love for distinction caused men to fill their minds with undigestible food, and now they bring forth fruits in accordance therewith. Now why shall we go the same way? Is there profit in it? Will it pay at all? We need no sweeping reformation in this matter. Let each parent instruct his or her children in the love of the truth, and that all these blessings come from our Father in Heaven.

The end of the gospel dispensation is near at hand. Let us cleanse ourselves of all impurities, throw off every weight,—all the unnecessary appendages—live soberly, righteously and godly, so that an entrance may be administered unto all of us who have named the name of Christ.

M. M. Eshleman.

Lanark, Ill.

Hotel Londres, Paris)
Sept. 22nd, 1873)

My Dear Father & Sarah: I wrote you but two weeks ago; but I did not then know our address in London. I will enclose an envelope with our address. I am anxious to hear from you, having received but one letter from you since we are in Europe. We are all very well, and have been all summer, for which we have great reason to be thankful. The boys do not seem to learn French as fast as they did German. They like the German so much better. Olive is the only one of us that speaks French. We like the French people very much. They are very polite, and very neat and clean. We were up on the gate called the "Arch of Triumph," where we had a view of the city. There is no use in my trying to describe this immense city. It looks perfectly wonderful to me. I do not know how many miles Paris covers. I know I used to think Philadelphia was large to look over, but it seemed to me, the other day, it could be put into Paris and would not make much impression. We have visited a great many places of interest here. We visited Napoleon First's tomb; and have stood on the spot where Marie Antoinette was beheaded, and her husband, Louis Sixteenth, and hundreds of others. France has a sad and bloody history.

We also visited two suburban towns. Versailles is one hour's ride, by cars, and is a very interesting place. There is a very interesting place there, and the grounds and fountains are very fine. It was the home of Marie Antoinette, and Napoleon the First, and many others we take an interest in. We also saw Napoleon First's carriage, and Josephine's, and Napoleon Third's, and many others. We also visited St. Cloud, forty minutes ride by the train. This place was occupied by the Prussians in the late war, and was fired into by the French, and destroyed, and afterwards the Prussians set fire to the town and burnt up the whole town. We saw the finest waterworks that we ever saw, and said to be the finest in the world. We have been in some very fine churches here, and have seen a great deal in Paris.

I do not know how long we will stay in Paris; but expect to go to London in about two weeks. I do not know how long we may remain in London; but I hope to hear from you while we are there. We have not decided what time we will leave for home, but expect to get home some time in December, if our lives are spared. We have had a good many rainy days since we are in this city. It seems very fall-like. The leaves have turned quite yellow; the air feels like October; but while it is cool, it is very pleasant. As fall weather comes on, I feel that I would like to be at home. I think we all are beginning to wish that we were at home. I do dread crossing the ocean; we were so sea sick coming over, and I fear it may be worse late in the fall. Give my love to Yoder's family, and to our friends. Lots of love for yourself and Sarah, and hope you are both well.

From your daughter

N. L. Sprogle.

Church News.

Now that our communion meetings are over in Armstrong Co., Penn'a., I will try to notice several of them, so that other parts of the church may know how we are still getting along amid the trials of the desert.

In accordance with previous arrangements, Elder H. D. Davy, of Casstown, Ohio, came to the Redbank branch of the church, on Friday evening, the 12th of Sept., and remained with us till Monday morning, the 15th, when he took his leave for home. During his labors of love with us we had a communion occasion, and also there was one added to the church by baptism. The Lord opened her heart to attend to the things taught by the Spirit through God's minister. May the blessings of God follow our aged brother in the toilsome journey of life, till his pilgrimage comes to a close, and then be heaven his home.

On the morning of the 26th of Sept., at 3 a. m., I left my home to meet the Glade Run congregation in council at 10 a. m. Johnnie Shoemaker, youngest son of sister Catharine, kindly conveyed me some 8 miles on my way. The meeting opened, and business begun, when we were joined by Elder Lewis Kimmel of the Plum Creek congregation, by whose aid and timely council all that was brought up for consideration was pleasantly and we believe satisfactorily disposed of. Brother Kimmel preached to us at night and next day. On Saturday in the P. M. a choice was held for two deacons, which fell on James Bawser and John John, who were installed in proper order. The lovefeast occurred that same evening, and the two deacons elected immediately began to serve in their office. The meeting was a quiet and an interesting one; one was added by baptism. On Sunday the crowd was so large that we divided it into two parts, and brother Kimmel, assisted by brother Goldinger, spoke the word of truth in the house, while the undersigned and brother Wells tried to preach in the grove near by. This closed the meeting, and we retired, some to their pleasant homes and others to their fields of labor pro tem. We pray that God will bless these labors to the salvation of souls, and to the glory of his name.

J. P. Hetric.

Oakland, Pa.

Plagiarism

Is the act of purloining another man's literary works, and putting them off as his own. This is what brother J. Weaver charges me with in the last C. F. C. Now if I had copied the parable, verbatim et literatim as I had seen it in a journal, then I would be guilty of the charge; but as it is, I am not guilty, as my parable is much longer, and improved so as to cut on every side. If J. W. will compare my parable with the one he had seen, he will see a great difference in length as well as style.

And as my parents have been spoken of in connection with this parable, and what sister Knouff said about my father is true, so it may be interesting to some to state why he did not unite with the church. I remember quite well, when the good brethren used to visit mother once a year, or so, that they would always talk to father, telling him he was just outside the Christian faith, and urged him to be baptized and do his duty, &c. And I wished he would do so, and be finally saved with mother. I was only a boy then, but often asked him why he did not join the church, as he dressed like them, and always went to their meetings, &c. His answer always was, that he could not greet those that were polluted with tobacco with a holy kiss.

When I see a brother that is clean, and pure in heart, with the love of God beaming from his countenance, walk up to one who perfumes the air around him, as he stands grinding the weed until the filthy ointment runs down over his beard and clothes, and his lips are besmeared, and say to such a one, "Good morning, brother," and kiss such lips, then I think, "Charity covers a multitude of sins." I would to God that professed Christians would avoid this brother of whiskey, purify themselves from a filthiness of the flesh, and present their bodies holy and acceptable to God, which is their reasonable duty. The great Bishop Ames, of the M. E. Church, once said publicly, that "tobacco is a greater evil to day in the church than whiskey." And I can not see a shade of difference between one who has formed the habit of carrying along a bottle of whiskey, and half a dozen times a day takes a drink, and the one who has formed the habit of using tobacco, and packs it along and a dozen times a day takes a wad and chews away.

Jesse Hiestand.

Palestine, Ill.

Information Wanted.

1. On the 11th day of Sept. there was a discussion at Lancaster, Indiana, by a United Brethren minister and a Disciple, in which one affirmed, that, "Separate and apart from His human nature, Jesus Christ is the Eternal God;" the other denied. They both quoted scripture to prove their faith, and left the people to judge. But I am not satisfied yet; more light is desired on that subject.

2. In the discussion in Armstrong Co., Pa., on the 27th of Sept., one affirmed that Christ did not eat the Legal or Jewish Passover on the night of His betrayal. If He did not, when did He eat the Legal Supper?

H. Shidler.

Martz, Ind.

Answer: We know of no such thing in the Bible as "the Legal Supper;" and hence Christ never ate such a supper. Christ ate the passover at the time fixed by the law, when He was under obligation to it. To attempt to eat it at any other time would have been a perversion of the ordinance, and a violation of the law.

The first we leave for others to answer.

J. W. B.

Brother Holsinger: I notice that you are about to leave the Companion Office; so I would like to know whether the next editor will publish the proceedings of the A. M. I consider them alone worth the present price of the paper. It pleased me very much when I saw the heading, "Proceedings of the A M" in the Companion. Not long since I heard a brother say, that has quite a number of volumes of the Companion sewed together, "but if brother Quinter does not publish the proceedings of the A. M., I will discontinue the paper. I am of the same mind. Brother Holsinger, you worked so hard for this privilege; and I esteem the fruits of your work highly. Yours in love,

A. L. Garber.

Information Wanted.

Information is desired as to the whereabouts of Elder Rudolph White, a minister of the Church of God. When last heard from by his wife and family, he was at or near New Bridgeport, Bedford County, Pa. In his last letter to his wife, dated there July 24th, 1873, he spoke of being home shortly; since that time he has not been heard of, and she and family are becoming very much alarmed, fearing he may have been foully dealt with. Any information concerning him, as to where he now is, will be most kindly received by his wife, Mrs. Anu E. White, Harrisburg, Pa. He was partly engaged in selling patent rights, when last heard from.

Queries.

Will some brother or sister tell us through the C. F. C. why Jesus cursed the fig tree because it had no figs, and when the time of figs had not yet come? Mark 11: 12, 15.

Also the 16th verse 20th chapter of Matthew, "So the last shall be first, and the first last; for many be called but few chosen"?

N. C. Workman.

MARRIED.

At the residence of J. S. Brumbaugh, New Enterprise, Pa., by the undersigned, October 23d, Mr. David E. Kagarice and Miss Mary Otto, all of Bedford county, Pa.

S. A. Moore.

By the undersigned, Oct. 18th, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. Alexander Newman and sister Annie Fike, both of Somerset Co., Pa.

Also by the same, at his residence, Oct. 24th, Mr. M. J. Brown and Miss Sarah Mantzny, both of Summit township, Somerset Co., Pa.

Joel Gnagey.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

October 5th, in the Beaver Run branch, Mineral county, W. Va., sister Elizabeth Arnold, aged 92 years and 5 months. Funeral occasion improved by the brethren, from the 59th and 60th verses of the 119th Psalm, to an attentive congregation of friends and relatives. She has exchanged time for eternity, and we hope her change is a good one. She expressed a desire to leave this world; and we hope, as the Apostle Paul said, that there is a crown laid up for her in the world to come. May the Lord enable us all so to live that when death comes we may be prepared to say, "Hinder me not, come, welcome death, I'll gladly go with thee."

Visitor, please copy.

D. R. Leatherman.

In Conemaugh borough, Cambria Co., Pa., Oct. 18th, infant daughter of friends Jacob and Mary Hostetler, aged two years one month and nine days. Funeral attended by the writer. David Hildebrand.

Departed this life on the 20th of Sept., sister Catharine Talley, late of Philadelphia, Pa., in the 64th year of her age. Truly was mother Talley a mother in Israel. Her whole life was spent in the service of her Master. A short time before her death, she requested the performance of the "communion service;" also the "anointment." Elder D. D. Sell was summoned and the solemn services were performed. It was truly a solemn time. All knew, that dissolution with our aged sister was nigh at hand, and to see the comforting influence upon her was truly lovely. She was sick a long time, and during much of the time she was the solicitude of her family, gathered from far and near, all eager to attend her every want. 'Tis seldom that it has been our lot to witness more genuine love and affection than existed in this family during our sister's protracted illness. A Methodist minister officiated very feelingly, from the words, "I am the resurrection and the life." He sang the very beautiful hymn, "Sister thou wast mild and lovely," &c. May the prayers of the faithful be offered for the family, that they may be comforted in their sore affliction.

F. Holsinger.

In the Yellow Creek congregation, Bedford county, Pa., Oct. 20th, sister Nancy, wife of brother Thomas Dooly, aged 45 years 7 months and 27 days. Her suffering was intense, but of short duration—less than three days. The loss of our departed sister is sensibly felt by all who knew her. She was a trusty mother in Israel; always ready and willing to administer to the needy. In her death the church has lost a faithful member, the children a cheerful mother, the husband an affectionate wife. May the Lord comfort and strengthen the bereaved, that they may live faithful until death, and land safely on the happy banks of deliverance, and strike glad hands, and ever be with the Lord. Funeral services by the brethren, from 1 Thess. 4: 14, to a very large concourse of people.

S. A. Moore.

Near Colesburg, Delaware county, Iowa, April 27th, 1873, Elizabeth, wife of brother John Moomaw, aged 55 years and 9 months. Disease, cancer. No human tongue can tell her sufferings, yet she endured them with Christian submission. We hope our loss is her eternal gain.

John Moomaw.

Died near Middleburg, Clay county, Ind., Sept. 3d, 1873, Rozette, daughter of John and Mary Vanhorn, aged 9 months and 4 days. Funeral occasion improved by the writer, from Matth. 19: 13—15, to an attentive congregation.

Anan'as Hensel.

LIST OF MONEYS RECEIVED for SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS, etc.,

J Z Replogle	1 50	J B Eby	75
A H Baltimore	3 25	D Frantz	1 25
S S Marrs	75	J H Wilson	1 50
A Applegan	65	R E Reed	1 00
T F Imler	75	Wm Bookwalter	4 25
W J H Bauman	2 50

We will admit a limited number of selected advertisements at the following rates

One insertion, 20 cents a line.

Each subsequent insertion 15 cents a line.

Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.

No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations.

TRAPERS, &c.

How to trap, and fish, and tan furs. All for 50 cents. Address

WILLIAM DAILY.
Nimisilla.
9: 41—50. Summit Co., Ohio.

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS.

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.

EDW'D J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen,
York, Pa

THE "SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS.

Manufactured by E. P. Needham & Son, 143, 145 & 147 East 23d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passengers Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:

Mt. Dallas Accom., at 7: 50 A. M.

Huntingdon Express at 2: 55 P. M.

RETURNING:

Express, leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.

Accommodation, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. In time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c.

W. H. BROWN, Supt.

AGENTS WANTED FOR

HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE

By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.

This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works, "Night Scenes," and "Our Father's House," nearly 100 000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. Z Ogler & M'Curdy, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1 00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,

J. H. Moore,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

Farm For Sale.

Guardian sale of 119 acres of choice land. Will be sold at public sale Tuesday, Sept. 23d, 1873. Well located, well watered, good improvements, bank barn, brick house, with all the necessary out-buildings; situated only 5 miles from good market; located in the western part of Milton Township, about midway between Smithville on the south and Pike Station on the A. & G. W. R. R., in Wayne county, Ohio, known as the Pinkerton farm. David Lytle.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2 50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARICE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-tf.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary Word-for-word English Translation. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. WILLIAM AIKMAN, D. D. $1.50.

Man, in Genesis and in Geology; or the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. WELLS. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporaneous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Aims and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By GEORGE COMBE. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structure and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an Illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid,	1.25
Per dozen " "	13 30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 60 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all exceept familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1 25 per copy, postpaid, or $10.00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$3.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	3.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25
32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION.	25
BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.	$1.70
Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Mcomaw, prepaid,	.75
Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid,	.75
12 copies, by Express.	7.00
Piove Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid,	.45
Browns Pocket Concordance,	.60
German & English Testaments,	.75
READ'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid,	1.45
" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid	1.40
COMPANION Volume 3, bound post paid,	$2.7
Reserved at the office,	2.25

HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $ 1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 20 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco To ministers on Tobacco, Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63, Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interest.

228 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,

431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

Will fill orders for Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or PANACEA West of Ohio.

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.

Waynesboro, Franklin Co. Pa.

Will control the Eastern and Southern States. All letters should be carefully directed as above, and letters containing money must be registered.

This year was more favorable for curing herbs than any other for ten years, the medicine is therefore warranted perfect.

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments."—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, NOV. 11, 1873. NUMBER 45.

For the Companion.

Do Not.

There is a great deal said about what to do, but not so much said of what we should not do; hence I will indite a few thoughts under the head of Do not.

Do not waste time and money running after every absurd fashion. Just think how many poor children those superfluous skirts and ruffles might clothe.

Do not clothe the body, formed by God, in such a way as to make it appear a deformed piece of work.

Do not torture your head with an unnatural amount of hair, and barbarous pins, until your head aches.

Do not associate with people whose principal topics of conversation are gossiping items and the style; they will do more harm than good. Choose your companions from among those who think and talk of something higher and better.

Do not cultivate a taste for reading the light, trashy literature of the day. Choose your books whose authors are worthy of the name; whose influence will lead you to stand more firmly by truth and right; whose earnest words will make you grow spiritually and mentally.

Do not read the Bible only at certain times, just because you think it a duty. Go to it often. Follow the man of sorrow during his sojourn here in this sin-cursed world; get well aquainted with the men and women of that day, and of ages long gone by; by their virtues let ours also be strengthened; by their faults, our own be corrected.

Do not shut the Savior out from your week-day life, nor only give him a cold welcome morning and evening. Keep him with you while working or resting, sunshine or shadow.

Do not become so absorbed in business of a worldly nature that your soul becomes hard and body prematurely old, that you forget to be social, genial, and affectionate at home.

Do not allow yourself to grow skeptical in regard to human truth and goodness. Those with whom we may have to deal may be dishonest, little-souled, hard hearted; but, perhaps had we inherited the same disposition, and been surrounded by similar temptations, we would have been no better.

Do not be over-anxious about "laying up something for a rainy day." Opportunities for doing good are every day passing away, while the "rainy day" may never come.

Do not ask God to bless you in a general sort of a way only. Talk with him alone, as you would with a confidential friend. Tell him your wishes, fears and plans. He is a better farmer, mechanic, and a better financier than you are; and it is wonderful how many ways he has of imparting wisdom to poor, erring, ignorant, human beings.

Do not mind your enemies, but go straight on; if they get in your way, calmly walk around them.

Do not permit yourself to be carried away by the multitude; for you will be all alone when you die, and when you render your last account.

Do not pass it along whether you believe it or not; but carry yourself generously towards your enemies, and lovingly towards all.

L. A. DOSCH.

Brookville, Ohio.

Christianity.

Christianity came into the world well nigh two thousand years ago—not in the guise of a new idea, to be consigned to the pages of books and to be discussed in the schools; but as a new fact, which purported to have power to renew all things, beginning with man's soul and ending with earth and heaven. Indeed, it announced nothing less than new heavens and a new earth, wherein rightousness should dwell. (2 Peter 3: 13.) But alas! we have discovered the means of making the divine promises false. Have we not upheld, against the Gospel, the Old Man, and with him the entire old creation? Are the heavens less firmly shut, less leaden than ever? Is the earth less barren or less defiled? Finally, is it peopled now by the Saints, and are we perchance that race which is born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, but of God? (John 1: 13) The pharisaism of the Jews, the idolatry of the Gentiles, all the errors and all the sins of the ancient world have appeared in Christ's Church under forms all the more hateful inasmuch as they are the corruption of sublime truth and morality. The kingdom of God has failed of being established here below; we still worship at Jerusalem and on Gerizem—not in simplicity and oneness of heart; the family has not in its sanctified affection copied Christ's love for the church or the church's submission to Christ; the reconciliation between the rich and poor has not been brought about by the recognition of that equality which the apostle preached (2 Cor. 8: 13, 14); prayer has not consecrated labor, nor has gladness raised men's hearts. Christianity was intended to be a life, and we have made it an abstraction, setting over against the system of a criticism which destroys or impairs, but cannot rebuild, other systems of orthodoxy which affirm without being able to convince and oftentimes without ceasing to doubt.—Hyacinthe.

For the COMPANION.

Evil Speaking.

Speak not evil one of another, brethren!—James.

Thinking we might add a little towards the advancement of our Master's kingdom this beautiful Sabbath evening, and having read the C. F. C, these words of the apostle James came forcibly to our mind. We have long been a reader of the COMPANION, we believe from its infancy; and while we welcome its weekly visits to our friends, and receive from its pages words of comfort and of cheer, yet we think we speak the sentiments of a good many of our dear members, when we say, we are oft wounded by the manner that some of our brethren express themselves to each other threugh its columns. We think, if the good apostle were among us, he would surely have cause to say, "My brethren, these things ought not so to be." What an ocean of trouble we should escape, as a church, and as individual members, if we would but heed the words before us! And if we could only get fully in possession of all the Christian graces, that the Apostle Peter speaks of, we think we would then be fully purged from our old sins. The good old apostle tell us to add to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, and to crown all, charity, which is love. No wonder the apostle says, "If these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." Yes, brethren and sisters, if these things be in us and abound, we surely will not speak evil one of another. O no! neither write evil one of another; neither put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in our brother's way.

Now, beloved brethren and sisters, be entreated to be more watchful and prayerful. Let us walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, in all lowliness of mind, ever esteeming others better than ourselves, and it will be well with us in time and in vast eternity.

Yours in love.

B. A. STONER.

Union Bridge, Md.

It is fifty years since I preached in this church. (All-Hallows church, London.) I remember it from a peculiar circumstance that occurred at that time. I came without a sermon; and, going up the pulpit-stairs, I hesitated and returned to the vestry, under much mental confusion and agitation. A woman that was there, noticing this, said, "Pray, sir, what is the matter with you?" I replied, "I have not brought my sermon with me." Putting her hand upon my shoulder, she said, "Is that all? Cannot you trust God for a sermon?" That question had such an effect upon me, that I ascended the pulpit and preached extempore with great freedom to myself, and acceptance to the people; and I have never since taken a written sermon into the pulpit.—Wesley

NOTHING procures love like humility; nothing hate like pride. The proud man walks among daggers pointed against him; whereas the humble and the affable have the people for their guard, in dangers. To be humble to our superiors is duty; to our equals, courtesy; to our inferiors, generosity; and these, notwithstanding their lowliness, carry such a sway as to command men's hearts.—Owen Feltham.

A true believer lives upon free grace as his necessary food. And, indeed, he who has really tasted the sweetness of grace can live upon nothing else.

The Ark and Dagon.

The ark, it seems (1 Sam. v. 3) was taken captive by the Philistines, carried away to Ashdod, and set there in Dagon's temple. We know what happened to Dagon in consequence.

This episode in Israel's history illustrates, among other things, the relation of revealed religion to all other religions. There can be no articles of peace between them. Christianity would not have had to fight so hard for recognition at the outset, if it had been satisfied with being called a religion. But it would rest with nothing short of being regarded as the religion. That stirred up opposition. It is a mistaken charity to claim, as some are doing just now in behalf of heathenism, a place co-ordinate with Christianity. And the ado which is made of the common elements held in solution by all religions, does not, after all, touch the point. There are some excellent things outside of Christianity; what makes Christianity precious, however, is what it has in excess to all other systems. There are many things, which, in a sense, are essential to a well-spread table, but what a hungry man wants is food. The lack of this is poorly supplied by plate and cutlery. Christianity has the "bread of life." Other religious systems want it. That is the difference. The religion of Jesus must therefore be aggressive. It cannot stay in Dagon's temple and let Dagon alone. The ark and Dagon can't be friends. Christianity came into this world to break idols.

Yet, Dagon's friends came to his assistance, and took him up, maimed and crippled as he was, and set him in his place again. Of course they did. To say nothing of their pride being wounded in his fall, he was their God, and of what is a man so tenacious as of his religious convictions? Yes, but what an unreasonable devotion! you say. Couldn't they see that this idol, half fish, half man, was no rival for the God of Israel? True; but men are in no mood for argument when prejudice is strong, else the Jews would have become Christians when they saw the empty tomb of Jesus. Attack a man's prejudices and he will hug them. So Hypatia tried to set up the Dagon of Greek philosophy when Alexandria was full of Christians, and Julian to undo Christianity by reviving idolatry.

The men of Ashdod only did what men of anti-christian feelings are doing to-day. The reason why so many men are up in arms against the gospel, is that it breaks the idols before which they have been paying homage. There is a Dagon of Intellect, for example. The Bible speaks of those who make a god of their belly, and it is just as true that some, though they are a much smaller number, make a god of their brains. There has always been a class of men, modestly calling themselves philosophers—lovers of wisdom, that is to say—whose business is to set inquiries on foot in regard to God, the soul, destiny, and kindred subjects—a very proper thing in its way. But lo! when Revelation comes, what does it do? Why, it tells men that their speculations have not led them far; that they have been looking for truth in the wrong direction; that neither stoic nor epicurean has found the summum bonum. What then? Are philosophy and religion at strife? By no means; or they need not be, if philosophy would be instructed by Revelation. The philosopher will get but little credit for originality though, if he accepts Christianity. Demetrius knows that there will be few orders for silver shrines if Paul goes on preaching at Ephesus. Now, on the principle that gas companies might wish to put out the sun, there are plenty of men who wish to get rid of the Bible.

It is the same with scientists—some of them. They are not all like Newton, or child-like as Farraday. There are even a good many professing Christians like these men of Ashdod. There are some men who seem to be the constituted guardians of Dagon's reputation. They always stand by to set him in his place when the religion of Jesus knocks him down. Let us rebuke the sins of society; let us dare to say that a sneering tone and sensual habit are incompatible with Christian character, and there are enough men who will take up the cudgel against us. They will fight us with Christian weapons, too—say we are uncharitable, self-righteous, hypocritical, and all that.

Then, as to having the ark and Dagon lodged under the same roof, there are some men who are rather pleased at this state of things. For there are not many men in Christian countries who wish to be either out and out Christians, or out and out heathens. There are some who seem to regard their secular and religious life as two separate streams, whose waters run side by side without mingling, just as the muddy waters of the Ottawa run parallel with the bright stream of the St. Lawrence. Or, changing the figure, there are men who have no conception of the unity of spiritual life, and of its influence over man. On the contrary, their minds seemed to be pigeon-holed. Their domestic life here, their business life there, so that a man may say, my business career is unimpeachable, even if matters are at loose ends in my family. Or, here is my orthodoxy, tied up, labeled, red-taped, laid away, so that I can put my fingers on it, whatever men may say of my morality. Or, I pay court to Christianity on Sunday, if I do bow down at the shrine of Dagon during the week.

And with some, it must be confessed that religion is a thing which is tolerated. It may have shelter, but it must be on its good behavior, and whatever it does it must not hurt Dagon. The moment it makes war on their pleasures, their pride, their ambition, men are as anxious to be rid of it as the Philistines were to get the ark of God out of Ashdod. We are often reminded of the men who desire Jesus to depart out of their coasts, because they had lost their swine.—Christian Union.

Be Happy Now.

How old are you? Twenty-five? Thirty? Are you happy to-day? Were you happy yesterday? Are you generally happy? If so, you have reason to judge that you will be happy by and by. Are you so busy that you have no time to be happy? and are you going to be happy when you are old, and you have not much to do? No; you will not. You now have a specimen of what you will be when you are old. Look in the face of to-day. That is about the average. That will tell you what you are going to be. What you are carrying along with you is what you will have by and by. If you are so conducting yourself that you have peace with God, and with your fellow-men and with your faculties, if every day you insist that duty shall make you happy, and you take as much time as is needful for the culture of your social faculties, you will not be exhausting life, and it will be continually replenished. But if you are saving everything up till you get to be an old man, habit will stand like a tyrant, and say: "You would not enjoy yourself before, and you shall not now." How many men there are who have ground and ground to make money, that they might be happy by and by, but who, when they have got to be fifty or sixty years old, have used up all the enjoyable nerve that was in them? During their early life they carried toil, and economy, and frugality to the excess of stinginess, and when the time came that they expected joy, there was no joy for them.—Beecher.

They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.—Psalm 126: 5, 6.

The Suffering Savior. [78]

BY J. W. BEER.

Loving Savior—there he hangs,
Suff'ring death's most bitter pangs!
Oh, dear Savior, can it be,
That my sins are laid on thee?

See his bleeding feet and hands!
Hear the taunts of cruel bands!
Oh, my Savior, can it be,
That thy suff'rings are for me?

Deep compassion from his eye
Falls on ev'ry passer-by!
Oh, my Savior, can it be,
That thine eyes may look on me?

Well may darkness spread around;
Well may quake the solid ground;
Well might rocks and mountains flee,
When the Lord's in agony!

Hear his strong, forgiving pray'r!
Hear his cry of anguish there!
"It is finished," hear him cry!
See him bow—oh, see him die!

Oh! dear Savior, can it be—
Was this pain—this death for me?
Yes, for me this shame and pain!
Yes, for me the Lamb was slain!

The Israelites.

Surely, if any race ever earned a right to a free and honorable existence, it is the Hebrew. The undying faith and constancy displayed by that people through centuries of persecution, outrage and unjust discriminations of all sorts in nearly every country in Europe, have no parallel in history. They are not a warlike race, and yet they have shown most heroic persistence and undaunted courage in upholding the traditions and faith of their fathers, and in clinging to their own ways, when by a few words of apostasy they might have won protection and all the rights of citizenship. For many centuries, to be a Jew on the continent of Europe, was to be the prey of every plunderer, an outcast debarred from all the rights even of the humblest Christian minds. In most cities, the Jews were penned up in teeming hives in a portion of the town set apart for their use, and they were locked up for the night, as dumb beasts might be. This practice has only ceased in Rome within a very few years. But times have changed, and the proscription of the Hebrew race is every day becoming more the exception and is surely destined to utter extinction. It is matter for congratulation to every American that no such cruel and bigoted legislation as that so long prevailing against the Jews in Europe has ever disgraced the statutes of this country.

At the present day, the Hebrew population is a large and valuable element in all the cities of Europe and America. They are invariably industrious, prosperous, and law-abiding citizens. In Europe they are carrying off the prizes in politics, music and commerce, and winning social distinction by their merits, wealth, and influence. A gentleman of Hebrew extraction is the only person the great Conservative party in England can trust with its leadership. In a crisis, the brilliant Disraeli is instinctively looked to for counsel, and his word is law in party consultations. The Rothschild family is so well known that comment is unnecessary. It is far more powerful than nine-tenths of the royal families of Europe. And here is Baron Reuter, who doles out news to the press of Great Britain and a part of the continent, and leases Persia for twenty-seven years, as he would a shop! The news autocrat of Central Europe is a Hebrew also, named Wolff. The press of Vienna is for the most part owned and worked by Jews. A correspondent writes that "in Vienna there are more Jews than crossed the Jordan with Joshua to smite the tribes of Canaan. In the Austrian Empire there are as many Jews as there were in Judea in the time of Titus—far more than there were in the captivity."

It would seem that in a fair field without discrimination, the ancient race is sure to win its full share of the wealth, honors and emoluments of this world. Its faith and patience are likely to be rewarded materially, and its intellectual force is making a deep impress in the times.—Buffalo Express.

Self-Examination.

Many persons suppose that the sole object of self-examination is to humiliate and abase the soul—to detect in ourselves all the evil that we can, in order to deplore it in confession, and atone for it by contrition. Now it is true that self-examination does disclose to us faults or sins of which before we were scarcely conscious, and that such disclosures do awaken shame. But as Christ taught us, the work is not to stop here. The mourning over the past is not the object of self-examination; and the exercise which stops there is lost.

The Master says, "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." The object of the Christian's self-examination is to avoid evil in the future; not to afflict his soul with the burden of the past.

Christ takes on himself the burden of the past, for all those who seek pardon and grace through him. The humiliation and shame of remorse is the very burden which we are to lay down, not to take up, at the foot of the cross. We do not honor his sacrifice when we seek to find on Calvary a load which he himself bore, in order that he might relieve us from it. Nor shall we, in one iota, atone for our errors by the effort to grieve over them. It is his atonement that we are to accept, realizing with free and grateful hearts that he hath borne our sorrows for us.

While some have misapprehended the duty of self-examination, others have contemned and neglected it, regarding it as a morbid introspection, which tends to fill the soul with gloom and spiritual pride. But the true object of self-examination relates to the future. It is—"lest we enter into temptation." When thus understood, this duty will be neither neglected nor perverted.

Two or three suggestions may assist those who desire to improve better this indispensable privilege.

Let it be a morning duty. Take a little time in the freshness of the first hours of the day, when the mind is bright and clear, the judgment fresh, and before the cares and disappointments of the day have jaded it, and when neither weariness nor satiety tend to pervert its instincts.

Let us begin with a forward look. What am I going to be to-day? Into what temptations shall I be likely to come? What is there before me which is likely to try me? Where am I weak and vulnerable?

Let it be, then, very faithful as to the past. In going yesterday through the same routine that is before me to-day, how did I err? What are the secret springs of passion, or of vanity, of selfishness, of pride, of indifference and indolence, of levity, or of appetite, which have reproduced again and again the same disheartening errors or the same weary conflict? Seek that mercy which gives peace to the sin-conscious soul, that all its powers may be aroused in preparation for the labors and the divine victories of the day. Thus shall penitence prepare us for the future through the sweet sense of forgiveness of the past.

Let this examination be practical in every detail, that the whole being may be stimulated and schooled, and enter on the duties and difficulties of the day forewarned and armed at every point, and with that serene vigor which only the consciousness of preparation can give.

Occasionly let a season be given to looking forward further and more systematically, so that not the day only, but the month and the year may have their preparation.

Let these seasons be so distinct and marked, and so happy in their tone, that they may come to mind now and then through the day, so that no temptation can present itself without calling up its own antidote.

Doubtless there are those happy Christians whose life moves on in so serene a way that they feel no need of such forecast. Many others have found their self-examination in the pensive twilight of evening, a source of dejection and discouragement, instead of an access of pardon, peace and strength. If such will sit down with their faces toward the future, instead of on the past, and with the coming day in mind, ask the Master, "What wilt thou have me to do?" and compare self with self, against anticipated temptations, they may find what was an unhappy duty transformed into a joyful privilege.—Christian Weekly.

For the Companion.

Outward Signs.

This subject is of vast importance, and is one that we should all well consider; for we are all therein concerned, if not about our brother or sister, we should be about ourselves, for we all have our failings: we are all liable to err, and thereby wave our sign to the world in error. Therefore we should be very careful as to our conduct, and the conduct of others toward us, that brotherly love may influence the same.

Some may say that we have nothing to do with our brother or sister's conduct. But in my way of considering it we have a vast amount to do as regards the conduct of others. We will suppose a brother or sister is in an error, in some form or other, and instead of neat, decent, and plain clothing, conforms to the gaudy fashions of the world. Now we see at a glance that there is something wrong. "Of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." In this case this language is very applicable; for the abundance of the heart is for those gaudy fashions of the day, and consequently the mouth speaketh for those things to adorn this human frame. Then we have a specimen of an outward sign, and very likely of inward corruption. Then such an one is brought before council. We have another illustration, such as has been used. Suppose an entire stranger in the city wishes to purchase something in the line of clothing. The first thing he wants is a coat. He sees a cigar sign. He says, "That is not the place—not the right sign." He goes a little farther and sees a coat, and says, "That is the place;" goes in, buys one and walks out. He says, "The next I want is a hat." He passes along, sees a coat sign. He says, "that is not the place—not the right sign—no hats kept there;" but goes a little farther and sees what he wants—a hat sign; he goes in and buys one. We say the illustration is all right, if used aright; but in my way of viewing the subject, I will draw a different conclusion than some of my brethren do.

Of the first part of the illustration I would say, if you see a cigar sign, and go there and find nothing there but cigars, you have found a perfect cigar establishment. That, then, corresponds with the perfect Christian—the one that has attained to Christian perfection, in whom is not anything found contrary to the laws of God.

And of the coat sign, you see it, you pass along until you come to the door, walk in, and what do you see? There is a coat, a vest, a hat; yes, a hat, something our illustration could not see or find beneath a coat sign. This is then what I would term a kind of variety. This part corresponds with that brother or sister who has embraced some of the principles of the doctrines of faith, and at the same time has as it were, reserved in one corner of the heart a spot of pride—an inclination to follow some of the gay styles of the day, and at the same time want to be a consistent church member.

And now back again to our council. When such a person is brought before the council, in place of compelling the offender to be subject to the laws, rules, and regulations of the church, I would suggest that the brother or sister who is in error would be shown the error, and thus overcome the error instead of the outward appearance; for if the error is not overcome, and the outward appearance is, the case is worse than it was before hand.

We undoubtedly should try to reason the matter carefully and prayerfully; for in many instances members will be led astray, and at the same time not see their error, and consequently they do not feel like complying until they can be shown wherein they do err. Yours in bonds of love; and if I err, chastise me, not hard, but show me where I err.

J. W. Wilt.

Rural Valley, Pa.

A Word to Boys.

Truth is one of the rarest gems. Many a youth has been lost to society by allowing it to tarnish, and foolishly throwing it away.

If this gem still shines in your bosom, suffer nothing to displace or dim its lustre.

Profanity is a mark of low breeding. Show us the man who commands respect; an oath never trembles on his tongue. Read the catalogue of crime. Inquire the character of those who depart from virtue. Without a single exception, you will find them to be profane. Think of this, and do not let a vile word disgrace you.

Honesty, frankness, generosity, virtue—blessed traits! Be these yours, my boys, and we shall not fear. You will claim the respect and love of all. You are watched by your elders. Men who are looking for clerks and apprentices have their eyes on you. If you are profane, vulgar, theatre going, they will not choose you. If you are upright, steady and industrious, before long you will find good places, kind masters, and the prospect of a useful life before you.

You must hold intercourse with God, or your soul will die. You must walk with God, or Satan will walk with you. You must grow in grace, or you will lose it, and you cannot do this but by appropriating to this object a due portion of your time, and diligently employing suitable means.

For the Companion.

Baptism—A Review. No. 3.

I now propose to enter upon a part of the subject, in which the critic would seem to exult, as though he proposed a question not easily answered, and which, too, the great mass of mankind do not see as I do. The question now before us is one of great importance, and should be esteemed so by all mankind; because the command is given by the Savior, issued from his lips, after he had burst the bars of death, and came forth alive, mighty King and Conquerer of death, hell and the grave.

In our imagination we can look back into the past, and on the fortieth day from his resurrection, see him leave the house of his friends Mary, Martha and Lazarus, and ascend the hill of Bethany. See him walk with a slow yet firm step, and with an expression of power and majesty. He ascends the hill with a holy radiance, which seems to be the very light of holiness and peace. It is an imaginary scene, impressive beyond expression. The hill thronged with an awe striken multitude, which knew not whether to remain or fly from the presence of the Son of God. He ascends to the top of the Mount, and stands upon its apex alone. The blue sky spreads out its illimitable concave above his head, and the air is filled with a soft halo of glory. He looks upon his disciples, and utters the following language. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." Oh, ye ministers of Christ, think for a moment of the language that was uttered, where it was uttered, and by whom it was uttered. Father Brooks, did you ever solemnly meditate upon the serious instruction given you as a professed minister of the gospel of the Son of God? Do you teach the nations to observe all things whatsoever Christ has commanded, or do you teach them that it is unnecessary to observe them? We are taught by the Revelator, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." But to the subject. We understand the language under consideration to mean just what it says: it says the three names in the trinity; And I understand it to mean that the nations are to be baptized in those names.

In contending with our friendly opponents upon the subject, they will tell you, that these three are one. We admit that; but does that change the idea conveyed? Not at all. The idea conveyed by the language, as it is recorded, is that the nations must be baptized in the name of the Father, and baptized in the name of the Son, and baptized in the name of the Holy Ghost.

"Well, but," says our friend, "we are to be baptized into the essence of the three; hence it is that one action will do."

Dear friends, the language does not say so. It is as plain as language can speak, that the nations are to be baptized in the name and not into the essence. The text under consideration does not say, that the nations are to be baptized in the names of the trinity; but it distinguishes each separate name of the Godhead in the singular number, as quoted in the onset. We will quote again: "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, (there must be an action to fill that part of the sentence,) and of the Son, (there must be an action to fill the second part of the sentence,) and of the Holy Ghost," (there must be an action to fill the third part of the sentence;) hence it is a compound sentence, and cannot be filled without an action after the utterance of each of the three names.

I was once interrogated upon the subject by a very intelligent gentleman, or who is regarded as such, who wished to know why the Brethren (Dunkards he had it) baptized three times, or performed three actions in baptism. I of course regarded the question as a civil one, and proceeded to answer it to the best of my ability. We were riding upon the highway, and had no Testament with us, and so I had to quote my passages as best I could. Among the many, I gave him the commission as recorded by Matthew, and proceeded to show him that the divine Author had given us the command by placing the three names of the trinity in the singular, and not in the plural. And I tried to show him, that, if the evangelist said, "Baptizing them in the names of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost," then it might look as though one action in baptism would answer. He thanked me, saying that the latter was the way it read, and that if the passage read the way I quoted, leaving each name in the singular, then there was no getting around the question, but that the three actions were demanded according to language. Having no Testament, neither of us yielded to the other's quotation; and so we parted.

The commission, as recorded by Matthew, is an elliptical sentence, and when the ellipses are supplied, it reads, "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and [baptizing them in the name] of the Son, and [baptizing them in the name] of the Holy Ghost." There are other elliptical sentences, and many of them in the Scriptures.

An ellipsis is the omission of a word, phrase or clause, which is necessary to complete the construction.

We will give one for an illustration. Matth. 21: 33, "There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard, and (he) hedged it round about, and (he) digged a wine press in it, and (he) built a tower, and (he) let it out to husbandmen, and (he) went into a far country." It is an evident fact, that the little word "he" must be there to make it a plenary sentence; but it is understood as well without it as with it.

We will give another. Luke 12: 18, "I will pull down my barns, and (I will) build greater (barns.)" In this sentence the idea is conveyed as well without the words "I will" and "barns" as with them; because it is understood, that he was going to build greater barns, from the fact that he was going to pull down his barns, and the word barns is understood.

Just so in the commission. The nations are to be baptized, not in the names, but "in the name of the Father." According to common sense, saying nothing of grammatical criticism, they are to be baptized in the name of the Son, and also of the Holy Ghost. The words, "baptizing them in the name" are understood, because they are clearly expressed in the beginning of the sentence.

To more clearly illustrate the case to our readers, suppose, friend Brooks, that you wished an immediate survey made by me, and I was to reply that I could not, I must first go to Weston, and Buckhannon, and Clarksburg. You would understand at once that I must go to Weston, and I must go to Buckhannon, and I must go to Clarksburg. But were I to act on the above sentence, as you do on the commission, with but one action, and tell you that I had done what I said I must do before I could comply with your request, you would at once say that I was a maniac, or, at least, that I was entirely mistaken. I think so too; for if I utter the name Weston, and stand still, and then utter the name Buckhannon, and stand still, and only act in going to Clarksburg, the first two parts of the sentence are not filled, and I have not done what I said I would do. Just so in the commission, even admitting your sprinkling, or pouring to be baptism. You utter the words, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father," you do not do it, but stand still; then you say, "And of the Son." What of the Son—baptize? No, you will not admit of that, but stand still; and then you add, "And of the Holy Ghost," and then comes the action, the very same as in my going to Clarksburg. I will let this suffice for illustrations, and enter upon other facts as proof of my position.

Weak and unworthy as I am, (not worthy of any note among the poe-ple of God) I have read considerable upon the important subject of baptism; and have never read any work of controversy between single immersionists and pedo-baptists, but what the single immersionist would quote some trine immersionists to prove immersion the primitive mode. The great founder of the Methodist Episcopal Church, John Wesley, was an immersionist, and not only an immersionist, but he believed in a threefold action in baptism, the very same doctrine that I am trying to vindicate in this essay; and it looks fully as strange to me to see Wesley's progeny repudiate trine immersion as it does to Brooks to hear a man preach immersion from a text that reads sprinkle—Isaiah 52: 15, "So shall he sprinkle many nations," which has no allusion whatever to baptism. "Well, but," says one, "John Wesley did not believe in trine immersion." For reference see the Life of Wesley, by Henry Moore, who was the only surviving trustee of Mr. Wesley's Mss., who says, "When Mr. Wesley baptized adults, professing faith in Christ, he chose to do it by trine immersion, if the persons would submit to it, judging this to be the apostolic method of baptizing." I will give a few more, and close.

Tertullian, the oldest of the Latin fathers, says, "We die symbolically in baptism." And he farther says, in his treatise on baptism, "This holy ordinance is performed by dipping the candidate thrice, face forward, under water."

Justin Martyn, in his Apology before the Roman Emperor, says, of those who dedicate themselves to God through Christ, "Upon their conversion they are brought to a place of water, and washed in the name of God the Father; moreover the person baptized and illuminated is baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and in the name of the Holy Ghost."

Basil, Archbishop of Cesarea, says, "By three immersions we administer this important ceremony of baptism, that death may be represented in a figure."

Clement, another of our ancient Christian fathers, says, "Ye were conducted to a bath, just as Christ was carried to the grave, and were thrice immersed, to signify the three days of his burial."

Chrysostom, another of our great fathers, who lived in the fourth century, says, that "Christ delivered to his disciples one baptism in three immersions of the body.

Theodoret, another who lived in the same age of the world, and who was a learned and eminent man, and of the faith, taught trine immersion as the only legitimate mode of administering the ordinance. Many more I could bring, but deem it unnecessary, for I am already too tedious.

The formula of baptism as given by Christ in the commission, when analyzed by rules of reputable authority in our English language, teaches only trine immersion, or three actions. The uniform practice of the Greek Church ever has been a threefold action in the ordinance, holding it as necessary as water is to constitute the proper element.

I do think that if our friends would search more diligently for the truth of God's word, and obey that word as it is left on record for us, they would not find so much time to fling their sarcasms at a conscientious and inoffensive people.

I will ask one question, and then I am done. The question was asked by our Savior over eighteen hundred years ago, and it seems as though it has never been answered. The question is, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

ANDREW STALNAKER.

A Few Words to the Young.

BY S. G. RIDDLE.

When Agesilaus was asked, What he thought most proper for boys to learn, he answered, "What they ought to know when they become men." This was a very appropriate reply, and is equally true in reference to the other sex, as they too should learn as girls what they ought to know when they become women. Youth is the time to lay a good foundation if we would rear a substantial and permanent superstructure for subsequent and future life. I would say to all young people, if you would enjoy this life, if you would be useful, if you would be contented, if you would be truly happy, resolve, if you are boys, to become men, and if girls, to become women, who make their mark in the world. I will subjoin a few paragraphs, bristol of good advice, for your especial benefit, which I have selected from various authors. They have often proved a source of encouragement to me when tried and discouraged in the struggles of life. If you will commit them to memory, or read them over carefully every day, and act upon the principles contained therein, you will never have any occasion, either in this life, or that which is to come, to regret your course.

1. Resolve on that kind of life which is most excellent, and habit will render it the most delightful.

2. None so little enjoy life and are such burdens to themselves as those who have nothing to do.

3. Always remember that the height of all philosophy, both natural and moral is to know yourself; and the end of this knowledge is to know God.

4. Never forget that knowledge and learning, riches and honor, even in their most resplendent gallantry, are all but insignificant pageantry without piety and virtue.

5. The active only have the true relish of life. He who knows not what it is to labor, knows not what it is to enjoy. Recreation is only valuable as it unbends us; the idle know nothing of it.

6. Have a definite purpose in life and never lose sight of it. Push early, late and often. Let your aim be what it may in reason, and it will be accomplished. All success is simply this reduced to practice.

7. Never despair. It does no good. Give up to it and you suffer all manner of unnecessary miseries. Recollect that others have been in ten times worse plights, have stoutly braved it out and made a triumph. A square purpose, a decided will, and a foot put solidly down are all you want.

8. And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the father by him. (Col 3: 17.) Now, the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen (Heb. 13: 20, 21.)—Evangelical Messenger.

THE beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water; therefore leave off contention, before it be meddled with.—Prov. 17-14.

For the Companion.

Christendom.

What on earth are mortals needing
More than Jesus crucified?
Though the multitudes are seeking
Worldly pleasures in their pride.

Some behold a bleeding Savior,
But they do not hear his voice;
And they show by their behavior
That his way is not their choice.

Others make a bold profession
Of religion in their way,
But are yet in the transgression,
Since the Lord they disobey.

Some produce a great commotion,
And they jump and shout and sing,
Like the raging of the ocean,
When the storm is on the wing.

Jesus loves a gentle spirit,
Meek and quiet, warm with love,
Well-befitting to inherit
Mansions in that home above.

God has no delight in jumping,
Shouting is no Christian's part,
Beggars should be mild and humble,
Asking for an honest heart.

Jesus never jumped nor shouted,
(Read of all that he has done;)
Even when his foes were routed,
And the victory was won.

He's our pattern, our example,
How to live and worship God;
For he gave us an example
How to walk the narrow road.

"Here is Christ" and "here is Jesus,"
Is the cry of every sect:
And their crying might deceive us,
Did their works them not detect.

Pride and schisms, "strong delusions,"
Show to us by what they fell.
And their factions in confusion,
Are so many—who can tell?

Costly living, worldly honor,
Popularity and fame,
Are not pushed into one corner,
But are made their special aim.

Many pay enormous prices
For a pew in splendid hall,
Ornamented with devices,—
Works of art—superfluous, all.

There they meet in gorgeous temples,
Glitt'ring with their lofty spires:
And their ritual all resembles
Human rites and vain desires.

Where they hear the lofty thesis,
Bishops and archbishops there
Read the written exegesis,
And the benediction prayer.

They will scarcely give admittance
To the lowly and the poor,
Who cannot afford a pittance
Their salvation to insure.

Thousands bow to crucifixes,
Muttering repeated prayers:
As when Satan freely mixes
Truth and error, wheat and tares.

They have forty days for fasting,
To their priests confessions make,
And of them forgiveness asking
For the Virgin Mary's sake;

Worship images and paintings,
Works of art and man's device:
But with God have no acquaintance,
Neither know they Jesus Christ.

Many meet in secret chambers,
In fraternal council rooms;
Pledged or sworn are all their members
In regalian costumes.

This is not the Savior's doing,
Such is not his sage advice:
Holy ends are men pursuing,
Who will enter Paradise.

Some are sure of their salvation
Any moment they shall die;
Ready, in their calculation,
Just to give this world good-bye.

Then, they have such happy feelings!
They rejoice, they say, in God,
But they heed not his appealings
To pursue the narrow road.

But a few through tribulations,
And refining fires have passed,
And, the hope of their salvation.
In his promises have cast.

They are scarcely stored in convent,
Or caged up in cloistered cell;
But reside throughout the country
Where the meek and lowly dwell.

They believe the Savior's teachings,
And they willingly obey
His commandments, his beseechings,
To pursue the narrow way.

For they take his yoke upon them,
And his burden which is light.
They are not ashamed to own him,
But confess him day and night.

Jas. Y. Heckler.

Harleysville, Pa.

For the Companion.

Crown of Pride.

By the word crowned we understand, in the first place, any ornamental encircling of the head, any mark of honorable distinction; and in the next place, we may apply it to anything which imparts beauty, dignity or finish.

The word crown occurs about sixty times in the Bible in such terms as, "The golden crown," "The holy crown," the "crown of glory," and "crown of life," &c. But the phrase, "Crown of pride" occurs only twice in the Bible to the best of my knowledge. You will find it in Isaiah 28: 1—3, "Woe to the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim, whose glorious beauty like a fading flower," etc. (3) "The crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim, shall be trodden under feet."

If we examine the above passages, we can learn that there is a "woe" pronounced against the "crown of pride;" and farther "it shall be trodden under foot." The question arises, who shall tread it under their feet? In answer I would say, that the followers of Christ should trample it under their feet. I know that the brethren are generally preaching against pride; but, at the same time, we must be sorry to see, now and then, one of our members that we must believe doth still wear the Crown of Pride. Not very long ago I attended a lövefeast, and among the sisters I saw one that I thought had the Crown of Pride on her head. I must tell you it looked odd to me, to see all the sisters having plain caps on with the exception of one which had a fashionable hat on, and I thought, surely it is a Crown of Pride. But she did not commune,

But perhaps I am wrong in my opinion; for it is often said, that pride consists not only in clothing, but the vilest clad may be proud in heart. I partly agree with the assertion; but at the same time, it is not very likely that any of the sisters are as proud with their caps as those are with their hats. However it could be possible that even sisters would be proud of their caps; but if that were the case, I would say to such, that they are wearing the Crown of Pride, instead of the crown of humility; and if they are ever so plain. I admit that it is not always the gayest dressed that is the prondest; for I have seen persons who were dressed in homespun attire and seemed to me prouder than others dressed in silk. But as we learn by Webster, the crown is not particularly adapted to the head-dress only, but "anything which imparts beauty," etc.

Now brethren and sisters, we, who have enlisted under the banner of King Immanuel, should be very careful that we do not wear the Crown of Pride; for there are various ways in which we could wear it, if we are not careful, not only on our heads and backs, but also in such things as fine houses and barns, if we would build to exceed our neighbor, and spend means uselessly just for beauty and finish, instead of giving it to promote the spread of the gospel. But I have seen brethren and sisters generally to appear humble at the time of our communion meetings; but it appears that, sometimes, when they are out among the world, some dress and act like the world. To such I would say, always appear at one place like the other; for, if you go with the world and with the children of God at the same time, you are trying to wear two crowns, and I am afraid that will not hold out; you cannot serve God and mammon. Christ said on one occasion, "He that is not for me is against me." So you can plainly see that you must be a Christian or a worldling; you cannot be both at the same time.

I had been often at communion meetings of other sects, who profess to be followers of Christ, that it made me feel bad. They at such seasons profess to eat and drink the flesh and blood of Christ, and I think that they should come very humbly; but instead of coming humbly they come in the very height of fashion and folly. Jesus wore the "crown of thorns," but they wear the Crown of Pride; apparently, each tries to be dressed the gayest, and they must have new hats and dresses, etc., before the communion and thus they appear to commune with crowns of pride on their heads and backs. I often thought, "Such persons are surely not discerning the Lord's body." Nevertheless, God forbid that I should judge them; but I am fearfully afraid, that their Crown of Pride will be trodden under foot at the last day, if they do not reform.

But it has been said to me, that pride doth not consist in the clothing, but that a humble garb might cover a proud heart, and that an humble heart can be covered with silk. Now I agree (as I have already hinted in this article,) that a proud heart can be covered with an humble garb; but on the other hand I am very slow to acknowledge the latter clause of the above quotation. I will try and give some reasons for believing as I do. I will make a comparison here. Suppose any of us should travel, (as many of us do,) and we should come to a town at meal time, or at lodging time, and we would like to have lodging and refreshments. Well, as we would go through the town, we would see humble huts, but we would not enter, for we would not expect to find, in such huts, what we want; but at last we come to a large house, sign board, "Union Inn," or the like. We would enter, and inside we would find what we expected. And so with everything. We can always see the sign outside; and if we enter, we can invariably find inside what the sign calls for. Just so with pride. If persons dress in the late fashions, and vanities of the world, I put them down as proud; for if we can see the sign outside, we may be sure that the substance is in the heart.

Now brethren and sisters, let us all try and tramp the Crown of Pride under our feet, and not put it on our children, as many do, and thus implant pride in their tender hearts, that can hardly be removed. If we tramp the Crown of Pride under our feet while we are here, then we can expect to wear the crown of glory in the eternal world.

NOAH B. BURGH.

New Enterprise, Pa.

Faith Worketh by Love.

BY THOMAS BOWMAN.

The cross of Christ is now the one divinely appointed instrument for drawing all men to God. In it is embodied the idea of divine sympathy with man. And in this idea of the sinless suffering of the Son of God, and that for us sinners, is hidden the divine secret for the transformation of our nature—for subduing by love the selfish heart of man.

The conviction of sinfulness and the promise of forgiveness is the peculiar characteristic of our faith. Humiliation for the one and gratitude for the other are the effects which it produces in the mind of every one who believes; and thus that which the moral law, or any law, could not do, the gospel can do. While the former can only forbid transgression, the latter attracts to obedience. Faith in Jesus produces love to God, and the love of God is the keeping of his commandments. Thus the gospel substitutes hope for fear, and love for law, and supercedes the commands of duty by the higher and holier influences of filial gratitude.

For the old principle in the world before Christ, "Do this and you shall live, do it not and you must die," our gospel has substituted the principle inspired by the hope of deliverance from sin. Now we hear, "Be of good cheer, thy sins may be forgiven thee;" never fear, only believe; and believing, we love, and love we obey, and thus fulfil all the law of God.

The assurance that God cares for us, notwithstanding our sinfulness, and that he has provided a way by which he may be a just God and yet our Savior, changes our natural dread of him, and enmity toward him, into love. Thus faith in Christ is almost almighty, where the threatenings of the law were weak.

Our religion supplants the sense of unappeasable anger by the belief of assured forgiveness, and substitutes for the prospect of evil, and that continually, the hope of holiness and happiness; and pointing out to us our Redeemer, our hearts respond to his bidding, and he leadeth us whithersoever he will. Verily there is a mysterious power in this faith in Christ. It is more influential than all beside.

It is hard to regard with indifference one who has forgiven us without upbraiding, and nigh to impossible not to have our hearts subdued into affectionate submission to Jesus, when we really believe that he died for us while we were yet sinners. So evil, yet so beloved, and that by one altogether holy, and at such a sacrifice! Can the soul who steadily contemplates the great mystery of the New Testament—God manifest in the flesh, the Son of God becoming the Son of Man—and ponder on what he said, and did, and suffered, to save us from everlasting damnation, and re-admit us into communion with the highest Holiness of heaven—yea, into communion with the great I AM—and then deliberately disregard his commandments, and live in that sin he came to destroy? The answer of the infallible word is, "No."

It is a libel on our religion to assert that a person introduced into the presence of God, brooded over by the Spirit, which proceeds from the Father, and the Son, and filled with gratitude for pardon and peace, finds it hard to deny all ungodliness, and live soberly and righteously, while to do the will of God is his chiefest delight and greatest glory. Men indeed may say they have faith, and yet live in sin; but then, our Savior has himself given us the rule whereby to judge them. By their fruits ye shall know them. They who mind earthly things are enemies of the cross, for our Faith worketh by love.—Evangelical Messenger.

For the COMPANION.

Extracts from Christian Writers.

1. "I hope the publishing of articles in our periodicals, written against the order of the Church in any of her practices will forever cease, and the necessity to reply will be avoided."

2. "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear."

3. "If there be any who do not so believe, let such seek their associates among those who are of like precious faith with themselves."

4. "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

5. "Whosoever is afraid of submitting any question, civil or religious, to the test of free discussion, is more in love with his own opinion than with truth."

J. ZUCK, Jr.

GAIN all you can, save all you can, give all you can.—Wesley.

For the COMPANION.

Cain's Wife.

There are some people in the world who profess to believe that Adam and Eve were not the only people created in the day of creation. And to prove their position, they refer us to Cain's wife, but which, when rightly considered proves nothing in their favor. If people would but take heed to the word, and not be wise above what is written, it would be far better. Mark the word, "And in process of time it came to pass." Not while they were boys. Not in ten or fifteen years after the creation; but in process of time. It may have been several hundred years after the creation, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord, when the Lord had no respect for Cain and his offering. But unto Abel and his offering the Lord had respect For it seems Abel knew what would be well pleasing to the Lord, and how to worship in sincerity and truth.

Now, considering that Cain and Abel may have been two hundred or more years old at the time that Cain slew Abel; and during this while Adam and Eve begat sons and daughters; for the command had gone forth to 'be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth." And their children and children's children for five, six or more generations, may have increased or multiplied in the same ratio that Adam's family did. So that it was no difficulty for Cain, "In process of time," to get a wife. Some of Adam's sons must of course have married their sisters, and as there was no law to the contrary it was not wrong. As Cain dwelt in the land of Nod, it is very probable that Nod was one of Adam's sons. When men lived nearly a thousand years, they could produce large families.

JAS Y. HECKLER.

Harleysville, Pa.

A Beautiful, Touching Incident.

The Bible tells us that woman is to be a help-meet to man, and the man is to be the support of the woman. To make married life a source of happiness, affection must rule the hearts of both. The married pair must be mutual helpers, one to the other. Then the conjugal state becomes a smooth and pleasant road, fringed with fragrant flowers, which bloom even in the depth of the winter of adversity and sorrow.

"I have read," says the author of a recent work, "a beautiful illustration of this point: A lady, travelling in Europe, visited, with her brother, a town in Germany, and took lodgings with a remarkable couple, an aged man and woman. They were husband and wife. They lived by themselves, without child or servant, subsisting on the rent accruing from the lease of their parlor and two sleeping rooms. The lady, in giving an account of the persons, says: 'When we knocked at the door for admittance, the two aged persons answered the knock together. When we rang the bell in our rooms, the husband and wife invariably came, side by side. And our requests were received by both, and executed with the utmost nicety and exactness. The first night, having arrived late by the coach, and merely requiring a good fire and our tea, we were puzzled to understand the reason of this double attendance.'

"When the time to retire came the lady was surprised to see both husband and wife attending her to her chamber, and, on looking with some seriousness toward the husband, the wife, noticing her embarrassment, said to her, 'No offence is intended, madam, my husband is stone-blind.' The lady began to sympathize with the aged matron on the great misfortune of having a husband quite blind. The blind man exclaimed: 'It is useless for you, madam, to speak to my wife, for she is entirely deaf, and hears not a word you say!' Says the lady boarder, Here is an exemplification of the divine law of compensation. Could a pair be better matched? They were indeed 'one flesh.' He saw through her eyes, and she heard through his ears. Ever after it was interesting to me to watch the aged man and his aged partner in their inseparableness. The sympathy for each other was as swift as electricity, and this made their deprivation as nothing. This beautiful domestic picture would only suffer from any words of comment."—Lutheran Observer.

Oh! it is sweet to be the Lord's, to be sensibly devoted to him! What a blessed portion is God! How glorious! how lovely! How my soul longs to employ my time wholly to God.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Nov. 11, 1873.

Editorial Correspondence.

WATERLOO, IOWA.
Oct. 27th, 1873.

After leaving Clear Lake, we returned to Nora Springs; and after dinner, brother Workman conveyed us to the Brick School-house, where the Brethren had appointed a council meeting. There was not a full turnout of the members. This appears to be a general shortcoming of the church. Our business meetings are not as punctually attended as they should be. They could be made much more interesting, as well as more profitable, if all the members would attend: not only the brethren, but also the sisters, young and old. Let all attend the council meetings, and all participate in the exercises. This congregation has only been organized within the last year. W. J. H. Bowman is the Elder, and John G Eby, minister. The church at this place is apparently in a prosperous condition. May the Lord keep it in this condition.

In the evening we preached in the Baptist meeting-house at Nora Springs. Lodged with Elder Bauman, and renewed our acquaintance with his family.

On Sunday forenoon we preached at a school-house near brother Toothman's, to an attentive audience. Dined at brother Jacob Ankney's. Had an interesting interview with his son-in-law, Brubaker, who is zealously engaged in the profession of teaching. We earnestly pray that he himself may become a disciple of the Lord Jesus, so that he may consistently teach his pupils the way of life.

In the afternoon we attended a social meeting at the house of brother Workman. Brother Workman is the pioneer of the Brethren in this county and neighborhood. His house is truly a Brethren's house. The meeting was an interesting one, and we hope the brethren and sisters will continue to assemble in such a capacity. In the evening we again preached in the Baptist church, at Nora Springs. Good attendance and excellent attention.

After meeting, brother Jacob Eby took us,—brother and sister Reber and ourselves—to his home, where we spent the balance of the evening and the next forenoon.

Monday, 20th. About one mile from brother Eby's is a very interesting mound, on the banks of the Lime Creek, which are about fifty feet high. It is a clay bank, having petrifying virtue, which is filled with petrified shells, wood, and animalcule. We have with us some very fine and rare specimens for our cabinet. Afternoon, brother Eby took us to Nora Junction and in due time we took the cars, brother and sister Reber for home, and we stopped off at Clarksville. Dr. Cronce met us at the station and conducted us to his home. His wife, sister Leah Cronce, is one of our occasional contributors Here brother Samuel D. Gochenour met us and took us to his home, about half-way between Clarksville and Shell Rock. Here we had the first opportunity to catch a few fish by the spearing process, in the waters of the beautiful Shell Rock River

Tuesday, 21st. This forenoon wife and I had a pleasant boat ride on the river, and gathered a number of small shells, with which the bottom of the river is lined. Afternoon, brother G. took us to Shell Rock where we took the cars, where we again met sister Berkley, and also brother Ellis of Green, who was on his way to Indiana. Here brother Joseph Saylor met us and took us to his home, where we pleasantly spent the evening, and next forenoon This was our home on our visit last year, sister S. being a sister to our travelling companion, Dr. Beachley.

Wednesday, 22. Preached at Orange Grove school-house, to a small but attentive audience; small on account of the inclement weather. Lodged at Elder Beachly's. Here we also had the pleasure of meeting our young brother Hiram Fadely, from the neighborhood of Dale City, formerly, but now of Jasper county, Iowa. He is now looking Kansas-ward. Elder Beachly expects to have sale on Friday, to sell off his farming utensils, as he intends to retire from business entirely. This will enable him to give his time all to his official duties.

Thursday, 23. Returned our riding pony to brother Saylor's. Dined at brother Lewis Berkley's, who then took us to see sister Harrison, who was however not at home. Thence he took us to brother Samuel H. Miller's, where we spent the evening. Our young sisters, Annie Miller and Katie Saylor, and sister Mary Miller, were also in our company, and we spent a pleasant evening.

Friday, 24. Brother Miller took me to Waterloo, where I spent the day interviewing the town. Dined at Dr. Gabriel Beachly's, where I had the pleasure of meeting brother Daniel Spicher, M. D. from Crain Creek. All were in good health.

In the evening we attended a social meeting at brother Peter Hoff's, in the room occupied by our afflicted brother, Jacob Moore, whom we had visited before. He is still painfully afflicted, and getting no better. Though his body is weak, we are glad to observe that his faith is strong.

Saturday, 25th. Visited at brother Abraham Good's, and brother Paul Cobaugh's, old acquaintances. Lodged at brother Henry Gochenour's, where we had a little singing circle; but were disappointed in having all the members present. Still we had a pleasant time, with all our disappointment. The brother and sister had gone to much trouble to have a pleasant interview.

Sunday, 26. Brother G. took us to the meeting-house for forenoon services, where we had a good attendance. Thence to brother Matthias Miller's, where we spent a few hours with the family and other friends who met there. Thence to Pleasant Hill school-house for preaching at 2 o'clock. Thence to brother Reber's where we again met the brethren and sisters in social meeting.

Monday, 27, which is to-day, we have visited at brother John Spicher's, in Waterloo. We are quite well, and have been since we landed in the State. The weather is cold with "skifts" of snow. On Wednesday morning we intend to go to Cedar Rapids, and on next Monday, Nov. 3d, to start to Nebraska. Until the 10th of November we will receive mail at Carlton, Nebraska.

Good bye,

H. R. Holsinger.

To Agents.

You are already aware that brother Quinter has purchased the Christian Family Companion. It changes hands at the close of the present volume. The Companion is to be conducted on the same principles it has heretofore been, and to have the same objects in view; and it is certain that the same labor and expense will attend its publication. We must therefore pursue the same general course. With our next Number, we aim to send out our prospectuses as usual. So far as possible we will send to all of our former agents; and we hope you will continue to work for the Companion as you have done, and, if possible, with greater energy. If any of you should fail to receive the necessary outfit, do not feel yourselves slighted; but go to work, at once, willingly and heartily, and with an assurance that your efforts will be appreciated. The cause is a worthy—a noble one, and we hope that none of you will hesitate or falter. Enter on the work of soliciting subscribers with confidence—with a determination to do your work thoroughly. Go not only to all of the members, but to your friends and neighbors in general. Do not merely ask them to subscribe, but if they hesitate, urge your claims, answer their objections, waive their apologies, and convince them that it is not only their duty but a privilege. Regard yourselves, not merely as agents for a paper, but as serving the Lord in that capacity; and "whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord," and he will bless your efforts and reward your labors.

J. W. B.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Death Penalty, Again.

In No 41, page 653 I find, under, "The Death Penalty," and over the signature L. A. Dosch, a reference to my query, "Is there any repentance unto salvation for murderers?" Dosch says. "On this subject I beg leave to differ with the writer;" and, "we are glad to see and notice the fact that the religious press has taken up the subject of capital punishment, and is discussing the question of putting men to death by hanging. Some honest, old Mosaics and Puritans stick to the old way of revenge, and, according to their interpretation of the Scriptures, still demand 'an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth,'" &c. And says he farther, "We have not been able to take that view of the subject," since Michigan, Rhode Island, Wisconsin and Iowa, "have repudiated the law of blood, for blood, and life for life. Here is the experience of five states. Look at them; are they not peers of any other?" "I think there is a better method of dealing with criminals than brother Sayler would. I think hanging is unchristian, unsuccessful, and even barbarous."

These are the views of L. A. D. on the subject on which he begs leave to differ with me. The reader will observe that the Religious Press, the local laws of your states, (which he numbers five), and I THINK; is all the evidence he offers for his differing with me. Not one scripture reference is found in his article. THE RELIGIOUS PRESS! What authority is that to ground religious faith upon? Consult it on any of the ordinances and what will you learn? Consult it on non-resistance, or on any part of the self-denying principles taught in the New Testament scriptures, and what will you learn? The State laws of Michigan, Rhode Island, Wisconsin and Iowa—what a platform to build faith upon, to those who read the crime statistics of them! L. A. D. will please excuse me in declining to learn faith with him from these. "I think there is a better method of dealing with criminals than brother Sayler would." Brother Sayler advocated no method of dealing with murderers at all; he only held, and still holds, that wilful murder is a sin unto death, which is not to be prayed for, and must be atoned by paying the penalty.

"I think hanging is unchristian, unsuccessful, and even barbarous." Of the mode or manner of executing God's law brother Sayler said nothing, and has nothing to say, not being appointed to that office; but to call the execution of God's law barbarous is synonomous with calling God a Barbarian, and is the same spirit which used to charge the Savior with casting out devils through Beelzebub the prince of devils. L. A. D. will please again excuse me in not believing God to be a barbarian. And as my faith is rooted and grounded, not on "State laws," nor the "Religious Press," or on what "I think," but on the law of the Lord, I refer to it.

"And surely your blood of your lives will I require: at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man. Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man." Gen. 9: 5, 6. Here is this barbarous law; which a merciful, and not a barbarous God enacted. "At the hands of man" does God require the life of the murderer. Does God change? "In the image of God made he man." Does a murderer bear the image of God? "He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death." Ex. 21: 12. "But he that killeth any man shall surely be put to death," Lev 24: 17. "Moreover, ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death; but he shall be surely put to death," Num. 35: 31. Here is a positive declaration, (not made by any religious newspaper, or by, "I think," but by the law of the ever living God,) that the willful killing of a human being is a sin unto death, for which no satisfaction shall be taken for the life of the murderer, but his life must pay the penalty, barbarous as it may seem to man. Has this law ever been changed? None but God or his Christ can change it. Did they ever change it? If so, where is the record of it? Jesus says, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law; for * * * till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law," Matth. 5: 18. So Jesus did not change it. And the apostle says, "There is a sin unto death; I do not say that ye shall pray for it;" 1 John 5: 16. The reason why he shall not pray for it is, because no satisfaction shall be taken for the life of the murderer. "And ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him;" 1 John 3: 15. St. Paul says, "The law is good if a man use it lawfully," and says, "It was not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers," etc., 1 Tim. 8: 9. "And all murderers with certain sinners shall have their part in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone;" Rev. 21: 8. And Jesus transferred the law, "Thou shalt do no murder into the gospel;" and hence it is to day as God gave it, a sin unto death for which no satisfaction is to be taken, or prayer made. And until L. A. Dosch shows the scripture in which God has authorized the Legislatures of the states named, The Religious Press, or "I think" to change, annul, and make void the law, these local enactments will not weigh a feather in the scale by which. "Old Mosaics and Puritans" weighed the law of God, and will continue in their way of thinking the barbarity notwithstanding. With the understanding that the children of God who belong to the kingdom which is not of this world have no part in the execution of the law which is made for murderers. And if there be any apparent hardness or cruelty in the execution of the law, let the murderer remember that "The way of the transgressor is hard; and he that resisteth the ordinance of God shall receive to himself damnation. For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." (See Rom. 13). St. Paul says that with a certain class of sinners Christians should not eat; certainly then murderers are not to be taken into the arms of Christians and hugged to their hearts in order to canonize them and hold them up as martyrs.

D. P. SAYLER.

Our Sunday-School.

Remarks to the Dale City S. S., by Dr. U. M. Beachly, Supt.

To-day closes the fourth session of our, or what we have been pleased to denominate, the Brethren's Sunday School. The success or non-success of our school, whether for weal or woe, eternity will reveal. That our school is a positive or great success, we do not claim; that it was not an entire failure, is a wonder. If the reasons that it was not a success, could be pointed out, and hereafter avoided, it might prove an advantage to our future success.

In the first place, I will say, that the children who have encouraged us with their regular attendance, have done their part, and have left a nucleus for future success. There are, at least, as many more children in our town and vicinity that should have attended. Who is to blame for their non-attendance? I believe that in most instances the parents are at fault. Why the parents, (brothers and sisters) have withheld their influence and encouragement, is surpassing strange and inconsistent. Many reasons might be given; but a want of Christian zeal and charity are perhaps, the most prominent causes. We have our likes and dislikes; and, above all, we like our own inclinations better than anything else. The rule or ruin principle is the bane of any Society, religious or secular. The old truism, "United we stand, divided, we fall," is every day verified. We all know this, yet we carry it into church and state. Into our Sunday-school and every other department of society.

That these are facts, no one can successfully deny; that we are all to blame, is equally true. Much might be said, but, believing as I do, that we are all cognizant of these facts, I consider it sufficient to have named a few, and pray God to enable us in the future to avoid these dangerous shoals and quicksands.

Our prospects for the future are bright or dark, just as we see fit to look at them. If we determine, by the help of God, to do right—to do what we can, honestly, intelligently, and willingly—as God may give us grace, our School will, peradventure, be a success; if, however, we make only a spasmodic effort, and then collapse into our old habits again, we have no reasonable hope of success. More than this, we do not deserve it.

There are many other features connected with our school that must be corrected. Every officer, teacher, and pupil must be held responsible to have his place occupied. The Supt. should know the why, when any officer or teacher is absent; and none but a legitimate excuse should be accepted, and that with due deliberation. The same rule should be observed by teachers and pupils.

I have remarked, that I believe that the parents are the most at fault for non-attendance of the children; at least we see that the few parents that did attend, had no trouble to have their children present. But I would urge upon my young friends, the children, if their parents, who perhaps have never as much as been to a Sunday school, are derelict and unconcerned about this matter, that you urge them to come with you; and, at anyrate do not forsake the school because your parents do not appreciate it. It is our reasonable duty, as well as our great privilege to attend, a privilege that most of our parents did not enjoy. Time is precious, and we have only the present to deal with. For our actions in the drama of life, we are responsible to God and our fellow creatures. Our future will be what we make it, glorious and happy, or the reverse. Of one thing I can assure you, that "evil communications corrupt good manners," lead to vice and wickedness, and, if persisted in, present and everlasting misery.

We have every inducement present and prospective for doing our duty. Will we do it? Let us resolve, one and all, old and young, by the grace of God to do and act in harmony with the spirit of Christ. Fair words and promises, without actions, will avail us nothing: "faith without works is dead." We now have new officers elected. Let us encourage them by doing our part, and make our school, as it should be, a stepping stone into the church militant, and from earth to Heaven.

Notes of Travel.

Brother Henry:

I send you the following sketch of a journey to Hardy, Hampshire, Mineral and Grant counties, W. Va.

On the 16th and 17th of August, in company with brother Samuel A. Shaver of Maurertown, Va. I attended three meetings in Trout Run Valley, Hardy county, W. Va. This valley comprises a few farms almost wholly encircled by mountains. The inhabitants are simple in dress and manners, and generally gave good attention to the word as we held it forth to them. On the 18th, I pursued my journey alone to Bear Settlement in the same county, where I met brother Solomon Biser. Here we had two meetings, good order and attention. There had been some added to the church here some time previous, and there are others not far from the kingdom. Brother Joseph Arnold and others had been preaching here at times for near fifteen years without any visible result, but like bread cast upon the waters it is about to be gathered in after many days. From thence we proceeded to Tear Coat, in Hampshire county, W. Va., where we had five meetings. Here had been large additions to the church within the past year. It is an encouraging field of labor. For kindness and hospitality the citizens are unsurpassed. They have in process of erection a commodious meeting-house, in which they have since held, as I learn, their love-feast.

In the afternoon of the 22nd, we proceeded to Beaver Run, in Mineral county, in which arm of the church brother Solomon Biser resides. Here I was met by brother Wm. George of Grant county. We held three meetings together, and pleasant meetings they were. This is the oldest arm of the church in W. Va. Here are to be found some of the old standard bearers of the church. Here once labored Elders Samuel and Daniel Arnold, who came from Frederick county, Md., and who were instrumental in the hands of God in building up a church here, and in sowing the good seed of the Word of God in adjoining counties.

In the afternoon of the 24th, in company with brother Daniel B. Arnold and brother John Ebert, I proceeded to Grant county, where we had two meetings in a school-house near the residence of brother Wm. George. After the last meeting here, seven were buried with Christ by baptism. There is considerable interest manifested here in the word preached, and the prospect is encouraging. Here my last appointment had been made, so after visiting some friends in the vicinity of Greenland, I returned home and found all well. "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, for his mercy endureth forever."

DANIEL HAYS.

Moore's Store, Va.

To Brother D. P. Sayler.

Confined in bed, quivering with pain, and vibrating between life and death, I write with feelings not readily appreciated by those who are not under that profound sense of eternal realities inspired by the prospect of an immediate audit before the throne of Jehovah.

My letter to sister Knouff was prompted partly by a feeling of distrust as to the manner I dissected the false reasoning, some years ago, in support of bare-headed worship for sisters. Another object, perhaps the principal, was the correction, in a gentle way, of the turbulent, self-asserting, denunciating spirit which so frequently reveals itself in our periodical literature. It is a matter of supreme importance that we guard against the inweaving of any quality of being the perpetuation and expansion of which we would not covet as an element in our everlasting inheritance.

That the caption of your letter in No. 41 is applicable to myself, I will not gainsay. It is only too sad a truth that it admits of universal application.

In justification of my style of writing, I have nothing to offer. That it was frequently seasoned with undue pungency, I frankly acknowledge. Less fire and caustic would doubtless have served the divine purpose equally as well, or better, and developed in me a character more beautifully symmetrical, and more roundly and grandly configured to the Perfect Ideal.

Your emphatic disclamation of kinship with the Tishbite, is hardly doing justice to yourself. Your lengthy reference to the occasion of invoking fire from heaven, is not quite pertinent. My allusion was to personal qualities, apart from a necessary identity of expression; and so far as my specification goes, I still think the moral portraiture I have drawn is correct. However strong and numerous the points of resemblance in the constituents of character between two persons may be, one is not necessarily a prototype of the other. The Prophet of Fire was not meant to be "set forth" as bearing any such relation to you. His archetypal character found its consummation in John the Baptist.

At this point I beg to call attention to a typographical error in my letter to sister Knouff, which you transferred to your critique. "He is the man of the Lord's host," is a meaningless phrase, the correlation of which, I have no doubt, puzzled every intelligent reader to find. I could not conscientiously endorse the application of such a title of super eminence to any one save "the Man Christ Jesus." The original reads thus: "He is in the van of the Lord's Host."

That there are disintegrating elements at work in the church is painfully manifest. A spirit of insubordination is industriously infusing its leaven. Collision of wills which are stiffened by intellectual pride; and a degradation of church-councils and committee-labors to the level of solemn impostures, presage troublous days to Israel. Criticisms that would not have been brooked by the Brotherhood twenty years ago, are now reiterated with unabashed effrontery. Vagrant theories, Christ-dishonoring doctrines, church-distracting innovations, isms and ologies that have sprung from a thoroughly heterodox paternity, are, in various quarters, maintained with a persistency, a simulation of logic, and, alas, how often, a fatality of effect, that is enough to make the heart of Christ bleed afresh. How to grapple with these grave difficulties without augmenting the danger of faction, or rupturing the bonds of fraternal unity, is a matter of stupendous consequence, and the great problem on the solution of which hangs the prosperity of Zion. To avoid magisterial dictation and arbitrary restrictions on the one hand; and avert disaffection, disloyalty, and disruption on the other so as to secure compactness of organization, unity of effort, and harmony of result, should be the one grand, controlling object of all corporate and individual endeavor. Here is ample scope for the exercise of all the Christly properties with which the Church is endowed. Love is a great conservator, inclusive of every attribute of holy character, and resorts to stern measures only when forbearance and entreaties and tears no longer avail It rarely finds full opportunity for the unhindered display of its potency. When called to the adjudication of a case involving an assault on our expressed opinions, how difficult to maintain an exact proportion between our rejoinder and the desert of its object! The danger which threatens the welfare of the church in this direction, deserves our prayerful consideration no less than the evils we seek to remedy. Many well-written essays lose their efficiency for good, and strengthen schismatic tendencies, by the form they assume under a sense of personal wrong; a sense which not unfrequently has its main root in an undue estimation of our own significance and capabilities.

O that we all were more completely under the omnipotent sway of Divine Love! O that we knew more of the blessedness of self-denial and self-sacrifice in a conscious coalescence with Jesus in the triumph of His Cross! O that every heartstring were quivering in sympathy with Christ in all the high and glorious ends of His Crucifixion! Then would His Love submerge every soul in its crystal depths, and the only rivalry would be who can crouch lowest at the feet of Emmanuel, and exhibit most of His self-forgetful, condescending spirit.

C. H. Balsbaugh.

Elderton, Pa.
Oct. 26th, 1873.

Brother Holsinger: Finding a little leisure, I thought it might be well to say, our communion is over, and our thoughts turn back to the 10th inst. with pleasure. The order and attention were good. Brethren J. P. Hetric of Oakland and Jonathan Kelso of Dale City were with us to break the bread of life. The Lord granted to us a feast of fat things so that many of us felt it was good to be there. We fondly hope that our being together and sitting together in heavenly places in Christ, and eating of that which is intended to memorialize the Lord's death till he comes was such that none would become "weak" or "sickly," or get into that worse state of living death or "sleep." We were made to rejoice to see two more made willing to take on themselves the name of Christ, and one restored to the church. Now may the God of all grace bestow on them and us of his spirit and grace that we may prove faithful to him that hath called us.

We had an election which resulted in the choice of brother Simon Kelso for the ministry; and of Wm. Miller and Samuel Wilcox for deacons. With the responsible duties resting on the officers of the church our thoughts turn about, and we feel to desire that not only may we officers walk becomingly before the flock, but that if each individual member would strive to be always in the path of duty, the relation we bear to each other would be much more profitable and pleasant, and the whole body would be edified.

In your issue of Oct. 21st I see a statement of expenses of A. M., and also contributions. Plum Creek is not mentioned. We sent a Bank check and have a receipt as follows: Dale City, June 4th, 1873 Received of Tobias Kimmel $22 75 for A. M, signed J. M. Olinger, Treas. Now the above may be an oversight and we desire as far as possible to have all right.

May the good Lord give us all grace to do for the best. Yours in the one hope.

Lewis Kimmel.

From North Coventry, Pa.

Brother H. R. Holsinger:

By request of the brethren, I will give you a brief account of the Sabbath-school at the Coventry church.

School opened on the 8th of May.

Officers chosen, brother John Harley, Supt.; brother Jacob Conner, Ass't. superintendent; W. E. Roberts, Sec't. and librarian.

Total number of scholars, 53; average attendance, 43.

Number of verses in Testament committed to memory, by four classes, 1099; number of questions in Question Book, by same classes, 1112.

School closed Oct. 26th, with an address from brother John Harley, Sup't.; and brother John Eisenburg, teacher, addressed the school at some length, reminded them of the necessity of making a preparation to meet their God. Stating, that probably before the season would arrive to open the school again, many of us that were present would be called to exchange worlds. He also admonished them to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

Yours in love,
W. E. Roberts.

To the Brethren in Kansas.

Dear Brethren, inasmuch as there have been calls made by the Brethren of Kansas for help, and as my health is not very good, I thought I would make a proposition to visit you. I will visit all the churches and brethren in the state of Kansas, this winter, provided those brethren, or some others will bear my expenses as I go. This I would not request, but I am poor. For reference send to Elder P. Forney, of this place; and for particulars write to me soon. Address, Vinton P. O., Benton Co., Iowa.

ELIAS TROXEL.

Changes of Address

Brother David Brower has changed his address from Sublimity, Oregon, to Salem, Marion Co., Oregon.

Brother Moses Weaver has changed his address from Ashland, Ohio, to Canton, Ohio, Box 82.

MARRIED.

On the 25th of October, 1873, by the undersigned, at the house of the bride, in North Buffalo township, Armstrong county, Pa., Elder Levi Wells, of Cowanshannoc congregation, and sister Lydia McCollem, of Glade Run congregation, both of Armstrong county, Pa.

J. P. HETRIC.

On Sunday evening, Oct. 23, 1873, at the bride's home, by Elder D. A. Kuhn, Mr. Martin Houseburg, of Crawford Co., Ohio, and Miss Nannie Markley, of near Nevada, Ohio.

At the residence of the bride's parents in Jackson township Cambia Co., Pa., by the undersigned, Mr. Edwin Burkhart and Miss Mary Ann Cobaugh.

WM. BYERS.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in the Indian Creek branch, Montgomery county, Pa., October 16th, sister Polly Price, widow of Elder Wm. Price, deceased, in the 80th year of her age. She was truly a mother in Israel, a devoted and faithful Christian, and a kind neighbor. On Sunday, the 19th, her remains were deposited in the old, family graveyard at Indian Creek, in the presence of a large concourse of relations and friends. The occasion was improved by brethren Abraham Cassel, John Iset and William Nice.

J. Y. HECKLER.

In Cambria Co., Pa., on the 24th of Oct., Robert Chauncy, infant son of friend Henry and sister Cornelia Snyder. Funeral services from Matth. 18: 3, by the writer.

WM. BYERS.

In the Upper Cumberland congregation, Cumberland Co., Pa., May 30th, brother John G. Hutchison, aged 67 years 8 months. Funeral services by the brethren. His disease was consumption and dropsy. He lived a consistent member of the church quite a number of years, and bore his affliction with Christian patience. He was a good citizen, a kind neighbor and a beloved brother. He leaves a sorrowing wife and three children to mourn their loss; but we have hope and all confidence, that our loss is his great gain.

Also, in the same place, Aug. 28th, sister Nancy Bowers, aged 44 years 4 months and 17 days. Funeral services by the brethren. She was ailing for some time, but finally death came suddenly, to the brother, her husband, and family. We held her as a useful, faithful and a cheerful member, a mother in Israel. Her loss will truly be felt, both by the bereaved brother and family, as well as by many members who are mourning their loss. But we mourn not as those who have no hope: nay, Jesus, whom she served, and in whom she believed and trusted, is able to crown her with a crown of glory.

Also, in the same congregation, Oct. 15th, Conrad Johnson, aged 66 years 3 months and 28 days. His disease was consumption. He was no church member, but held to the doctrine the brethren uphold. A few days before he died, he was asked how his hopes were in reference to the future. He answered: "I think I would feel better if I were baptized;" but considering himself too weak to have baptism administered to him, he further said, He knew nothing better for him now to attend to, than to throw himself on the mercies of the Lord. He told to take hold, by faith in the availing sacrifice made for sin by Jesus Christ. His affliction he bore with patience. He was a good citizen, an innocent, harmless creature, and an honest and kind neighbor. The subject of this notice was a son of Elder Christopher Johnson, the first bishop of this district. Funeral services by the brethren.

DANIEL KELLER.

In Clarion congregation, Clarion county, Pa., John Zellars, born in Switzerland, July 8th, 1775, died October 23d, 1873, aged 98 years 3 months and fourteen days. Funeral discourse by the writer, from Romans 4: 7 8, a scripture selected by the deceased, in the presence of a large and attentive congregation. As a remarkable fact he retained his senses until the last, divided his property among his children two days before his death.

GEORGE WOOD.

We will admit a limited number of select advertisements at the following rates
One insertion, 20 cents a line.
Each subsequent insertion 15 cents a line.
Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.
No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations.

TRAPERS, &c.

How to trap, and fish, and tan furs. All for 50 cents. Address
WILLIAM DAILY.
Nimisilla,
9: 41—5*. Summit Co., Ohio.

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS.

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.
EDWD J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen,
YORK, PA

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passengers Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:

MT. DALLAS ACCOM., at 7: 50 A. M.
HUNTINGDON EXPRESS at 2. 55 P. M.

RETURNING.

EXPRESS leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.

ACCOMMODATION, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. In time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c.

W. H BROWN, SUPT.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE
By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.

This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works, "NIGHT SCENES," and "OUR FATHER'S HOUSE," nearly 100,000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. ZEIGLER & M'CURDY, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE
"SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS,

Manufactured by E. P. Needham & Son, 143, 145 & 147 East 23d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1 00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,
J. H. MOORE,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2 50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARICE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-tf.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an interlineary Word-for-word English Translation. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. WILLIAM AIKMAN, D. D. $1.50.

Man, in Genesis and in Geology; or the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. WELLS. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporaneous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Aims and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By GEORGE COMBE. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structure and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by true immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid.	1.25
Per dozen " "	13 30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 50 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt. with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6 00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1 25 per copy, post paid, or $10.00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$3.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	3.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25

32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION. 25

BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA. $1.70

Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Moomaw, prepaid,	.75
Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid,	.75
12 copies, by Express.	7.00
Pious Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid,	.45
Browns Pocket Concordance,	.60
German & English Testaments,	.75
NEAD'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid,	1.45
" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid	1.40
COMPANION Volume 3, bound post paid,	$2.7
Reserved at the office.	2.25

HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco To ministers on Tobacco. Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63. Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTTS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interst.

2-8 pages, Price 6 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

DR. FAHRNEY'S

Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

A tonic and purge, for Blood Diseases. Great reputation. Many testimonials. Many ministering brethren use and recommend it. Ask or send for the "Health Messenger." Use only the "Panacea" prepared by

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,
431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill

AND

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.
Waynesboro, Franklin Co, Pa.

☞ Agents Wanted Everywhere. ☜

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, NOV. 18, 1873. NUMBER 46.

For the COMPANION.

Emotions that Cannot be Told.

BY M. S. BOOL.

While the sun in his glory and splendor,
In the morning is rising to view;
While his beams, from the grass fresh and tender,
First are lifting the night-fallen dew;
While dame Nature is singing with gladness,
To they joy of the young and the old,
There's a bosom that's heaving in sadness,
With emotions that cannot be told.

While the day is replendent with beauty,
And the fields and the forests seem gay;
While the faithful are active in duty,
And the sportive engage in their play;
While the world moves along all unheeding
Both its sorrows and joys to unfold,
There's a heart in its solitude bleeding,
With emotions that cannot be told.

While the sun sinks to rest in his glory,
And the clouds float in crimson and gold;
While the busy day closes its story,
And the shades of the ev'ning unfold;
While the millions their pleasures are taking,
And the scrolls of their hearts are unrolled,
There's a heart that is beating and aching
With emotions that cannot be told.

While the night, with its hallowing slumbers,
Spreads her mantle so gently around;
While the stars, in their infinite numbers—
In their heavenly beauty abound;
While the weary are resting or sleeping,
Or fond lovers their feelings unfold,
There is one that is often found weeping,
With emotions that cannot be told.

But when life, so eventful and fleeting,
With this suff'rer shall come to an end;
In the grand—the August judgment meeting,
Where the millions of earth must attend;
When the Judge is enthroned in his glory,
And the scrolls of all hearts are unroll'd,
Then the world may give ear to the story
Of emotions that never were told.

For the COMPANION.

Stray Sheep.

It is an old saying that "Birds of one feather will flock together." The same may also be said of sheep: so long as they are not molested by wolves, or a wolf in sheep's clothing, they will flock together. When sheep have been kept in one fold by a faithful shepherd, if even the pasture becomes scarce, and the sheep go far upon the mountains to feed; so long as the shepherd is faithful, and there is no wolf to scatter them, they will still flock together. But if a wolf should get into the flock, and so much the worse if he come in sheep's clothing, the sheep will invariably be scattered. They will soon know from what they have been bitten, and what is the cause of their being scattered. Then a faithful shepherd, if he has no sore eyes, will soon detect the wolf, even if he be in sheep's clothing. But if the shepherd should be indifferent about his flock, and let the wolf scatter his sheep, it needs no further proof, that he is not a good shepherd, because a good shepherd will lay down his life for his sheep. It may happen, when sheep have been scattered, that they will get shy, and not come to be fed when others are fed, and if the shepherd be partial among his sheep, he may rejoice when his servants go out and throw stones and clubs among them: and then they may stand at bay for a while, and get lean, and if the shepherd does not care for them, they may go astray and be lost. Lost for want of care! Oh! inestimable loss! But a good shepherd will leave his sheep while they are feeding, and will search those sheep that have gone astray, and deliver them out of the places where they have been scattered in a cloudy and a dark day. For thus saith the Chief Shepherd, "If a man have a hundred sheep and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray? And if so be that he findeth it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine, which went not astray." And what harm could there be, or what loss to suffer, if a shepherd deny himself a little, or humble himself against his own will to save his sheep? And will there not be great rejoicing among the shepherds and among sheep when the lost have been found? When the sick have been healed, and the diseased have been strengthened: when the scattered have been gathered, and that which was driven away brought back; and the shepherd can return to the Chief Shepherd, and say, "Those that thou gavest me, I have kept, and none of them is lost." For a good shepherd is not willing that the least should be lost. When sheep become divided and go in parties, but this will not happen so long as the shepherds are faithful, and there is no wolf among them; faithful shepherds will not claim one party and reject the other, but they will stoop down, remove the line of division, and reconcile all parties unto each other, and will unite all the sheep in one fold. But oh! desolation and misery; when a shepherd goes astray and takes part of his flock along; when he is fond of praise, and delights in taking honor of men; when he muddies the stream where the sheep should drink, and fleeces the weak and wounded ones! I need not say what a bad shepherd will do; but a good shepherd will lay down his life for his sheep. A good shepherd will not disown a part of his flock for any purpose, but a good shepherd will lay down his life for his sheep. He will lay down his life and still live. He will deny himself. He will humble himself for his sheep to keep them, to save them; and will not disown them. Rub it out if you can, deny it if you dare: it is the word of eternal truth. "A good shepherd will lay down his life for his sheep." When a disease gets into a sheepfold, what will a good shepherd do? He will remove everything that is offensive or dangerous to their health, and if needs be, he will apply to a physician for a remedy and will do all diligence to have the disease removed, that the sheep may be restored to a healthy condition. Because a good shepherd will keep in memory that he must give an account of his flock. But if a shepherd should let a disease continue among his flock, and not apply any remedy, where shall the end of the loss be? Instead of increasing and prospering, as sheep will do in a healthy condition; in an unhealthy condition they decrease an perish. It is the nature of sheep that they will flock together, and when it is time to be fed they will be in their place, but when they are diseased, they will scarcely come to be fed, and will get lean. And if the shepherd does not care for their disease, he and his servants may throw stones and clubs at them to fetch them up to the others when they hang back. But it is still true that a good shepherd will lay down his life for his sheep. JAS. Y. HECKLER.

For the COMPANION.

The Sufficiency of Christ.

When we examine the early history of Christianity, we find that the primitive church, in its infancy, did not comprehend the fullness there is in Christ. The apostles did not, in the beginning of their ministerial labors, understand what Paul afterward declared—"The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." The Jews were so entangled in the types and shadows of the law, and in the commands and ordinances of their rulers, that they could not see clearly Him who came "To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace." The apostles knew that Jesus had kept the law, and that he had said that he did not come to destroy but to fulfil.

If we comprehend the teachings and practices among the Jews, we will understand why some taught, that, unless "ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved." Circumcision had been instituted by God himself, and had been rigidly observed in the Jewish church from the time of Abraham. Their faith in circumcision being founded on a sure foundation,—God's law,—we do not wonder that they did not at once understand, that "in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love."

The Judaizing teachers had brought forth such strong arguments in favor of circumcision, that the apostles, with the church, thought it necessary to decree that converts need not be circumcised. The Jewish faith was in the type, whereas the type was commanded to cause faith in the antitype. Notwithstanding the gospel light of the Son of God has been shining for over eighteen hundred years, we still have confidence in types and shadows. The Jews expected justification by the deeds of the law, we by the decrees of the church. The Jews worshipped their ritual more than they worshipped God; we preach the ordinances and customs of the church more than we preach Christ. The Jews made broad their phylacteries, that they might "outwardly appear righteous unto men;" we observe an "order," that we may be known by the world, if not by Christ. The Jews added to the law their commands and traditions, thus making the word of God of none effect; we have passed decisions and enacted ordinances, that, if all had been put in a book, it would have been more difficult to have obeyed that book than the Mosaic law and their traditions. When the Jews were asked to give up circumcision, they were asked to part with what God had established; we might cease to practice some things and only forsake the traditions of the elders.

Peter tells us, "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ," &c. Brethren, we would convert more souls for Christ, if, we would leave off our peculiarities, and not know anything "save Jesus Christ and him crucified."

S. M. Minnich.

Cross of Christ.

Sweet, sweet is his cross; light, light and easy his yoke. O what a step were it up to my Father's house through ten deaths, for the truth and cause of that unknown, and so not half well-loved, plant of renown, the Man called the Branch, the Chief among ten thousand, the fairest among the sons of men. O what unseen joys, how many hidden heart-burnings of love are the remnants of the sufferings of Christ! Welcome, welcome, sweet. sweet and glorious cross of Christ; welcome, sweet Jesus, with thy light cross; thou hast now gained and gotten all my love from me; keep what thou hast gotten.

If it were come to exchanging crosses, I would not exchange my cross with any: I am well pleased with Christ, and he with me.

I find that my Lord hath over-gilded that black tree—the cross—and hath perfumed it, and oiled it with joy and consolation. Christ beareth me good company; he hath raised me when I saw it not, lifting the cross off my shoulders, so that I think it to be but a feather, because underneath are everlasting arms. God forbid it to come to bartering or exchanging of crosses; for I think my cross so sweet that I know not where I would get the like of it. Christ's honeycombs drop so abundantly that they sweeten my gall.—Rutherford.

Tried Gold.

BY LYNN WOOD.

Our dear Lord, who from His Heavenly City
Sees His children in their wanderings to and fro,
Watching o'er them with a tender love and pity
As a father, feels the measure of their woe.

With an Infinite compassion, He beholds them,
With a longing none can fathom, listens still
For a prayer—the faintest whisper—and withholds them
In his mercy, from transgression of His will.

One among them, often tempted, often straying,
Often faltering in her love and in her zeal
But still longing to be worthy, sought Him, praying
"Make me thine!" and thus he answered her appeal.

"I will try thee, my Beloved, as by fire,
I will fit thee for the table of the Lord,
There to share with me the Pasch, which I desire
In the mansions of the Everlasting Word.

"Thou must drink, yea! drain, the cup of bitter sorrow.
Thou must wear the cruel, thorny crown of pain,
Thou must wait, thro' weary nights, the coming morrow.
Still to bear the cross till night shall come again,

But fear not, although the way be long and dreary
Be thou patient, if the heavy cross should gall,
O remember, child of mine! once weak and weary
For thy sake, because I loved, I bore it all."

Then He spoke unto the winged angels, standing,
Hushed and happy, near the glory of the Throne,
And they, lifting up their eyes at his commanding,
Saw her kneeling, bowed and silent and all a'one.

"Unto you, behold! the care of her is g'ven.
Watch and strengthen her by day and in the night
Ye rejoice to share with all the joys of heaven,
Since ye conquered Death and Satan by my might."

Years went onward where the sun is ever setting,
[In the City of the King there is no time!]
And they brought her, all her sinfulness regretting
To the borders of Death's dark and silent clime.

He whose promises are never, never broken,
Had been faithful to His weak and helpless one,
Often teaching her by many a blessed token,
That the Father loveth those who love the Son.

She had drained the cup of tears His hand extended
One by one the loved and loving left her side,
But she learned to look on Life begun not ended,
And forgot while praying for them, they had died.

Angel hands! Oh! can they be cruel in loving?
Laid the crown upon her proud, uplifted brow,
Bowed her very soul with pain, its sin reproving,
And recalling every false and broken vow.

And they whispered to her, fainting, sick with weeping,
Holy words they caught while sitting at His feet.
And the love that grew upon her, over-sweeping
All her sorrow, made the bitter very sweet.

So thro' days and nights she, ever toiling onward
With the cross clasped close and closer to her breast,
Came at last, her fading face still turning sunward,
To the place where He had ordered she should rest.

There he met her—took the cross—with love recrowned her,
Kissed her pale lips with the blessed kiss of peace,
Wrapped the mantle of His glory close around her,
And the angels sang the song of her release.

Was St. Paul a Bachelor?

BY MRS. H. V. REED.

It seems to be a pretty general impression that Paul was a bachelor, and many ladies of the present day have formed an opinion of him which is decidedly unfavorable.

Those who are strongly interested in the suffrage movement appear to be greatly exercised by his advice to woman and disposed to rebel against it; but it must be that they who condemn him so rashly have not read all that he has written on the "Woman Question," and we protest against his being condemned unheard.

This article has been suggested by the words of a recent writer, who pitches into Paul without a bit of mercy, calling him an old bachelor and blaming men and women for ever believing in his instructions. Now, I am in favor of universal justice and we women must always be careful not to condemn our friends.

I believe, and propose to show, that Paul was a married man,, and a strong advocate of "Woman's Rights."

The Corinthian church had written to him for directions upon the subject of matrimony in a time of great persecution, and, under the circumstances, he seems to think that for the time being, the unmarried had better remain so.

No candid man can think for a moment that Paul intended to disapprove of God's ordinance. He gives directions for the greatest faithfulness and affection on the part of the married; but he says, "I say therefore to the unmarried and widows that it is good for them if they abide even as I." This is his advice—not by commandment, but by permission.

The word unmarried in the above text is agamoi, and applies to those who have lost their companions, and Belsham renders it, "widowers." In this sense it is properly joined with h'eera (widow), hence the idea of the writer is plain.

Eusebius, Clement, and other historians speak of Paul as a married man, and according to the best historical evidence we can get, he was at the time of writing this epistle a widower.

And thus he remained true to the dead and admonished other men who had lost their wives to persue a similar course.

Is there anything very objectionable in this advice? If there is a woman in America who is particularly anxious for her husband to marry again after her death, we should like to see her.

The Apostle's "advice to wives," in the 5th chapter of Ephesians, seems to be very offensive to some because he admonishes them to obedience.

Husbands, however, are very fond of quoting it. If there is but one text in the Bible with which they are acquainted, it is that; but do you ever hear the 25th verse from masculine lips? Listen: "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it." There, gentlemen, is your rule of conduct—don't forget, and, by the way, how do you like it? Oh, where is there a greater love than this? and what an exalted opinion Paul must have had of woman, to deem her worthy of such affection! Rest assured that obedience will gladly follow a love like that.

When men are honest, loyal and true—when they tenderly love and shield even at the sacrifice of self, then woman will "honor and obey" without any objection or regrets.

Don't look incredulous; some of us are blessed with just such husbands, and think we know how to appreciate them. You never hear this class complaining of rebellious wives. If all men were what they should be, "Woman's Rights Conventions" would pass away forever, and wives would be too happy at home to ever seek the platform. Let those who are annoyed by these "manifestations," seek to abolish them by a radical improvement of the male sex.

But in the face of such advice as the above, a lady writer says: Though he might have understood the management of the women of Macedonia, he wasn't quite up to the womanly intellects of the nineteenth century."

My own impression is that Paul's method of domestic management is just what the "womanly intellects of the nineteenth century" would do best to appreciate and profit by, but what, alas, few of them are blessed with. Any woman would be satisfied with an affection like that, and if she would not, why, she doesn't deserve any,

Let those who are troubled with unappreciative wives try Paul's recipe, and if this tender care and surpassing love does not win them back, they are made of different material from the rest of womankind.

Again the lady says, "In my opinion an old bachelor, whether he be saint, apostle, prophet, evangelist, pastor or teacher, hasn't the slightest business to express an opinion in reference to other men's wives." Well, it is drawing the line pretty close in these days of free speech if a man is not allowed to express an opinion because he isn't fortunate enough to have a wife. Is that to be the rule of action, or rather inaction, when women are candidates for office? To be sure, we are not willing for bachelors to criticise other men's wives very freely, nor shall we permit sharp-nosed old maids to find fault with our husbands, or prescribe rules for the management of our children. They may feed their canaries and train their cats and poodles as they please (provided of course the cats and poodles can stand it,) but they can't manage our babies.

And if they haven't any room for the milk of human kindness in their veins, they needn't spend their time in whining about Paul's ideas of matrimony. His admonitions faithfully followed lead to the highest and purest happiness that mankind is capable of. He represents the husband as being the head of the family, and every man ought to be worthy of that position; then he exhorts him to "Love is wife." Ah, yes, Paul, that is the keyhole of true matrimony—this never-failing, never-changing love—that lives through storm and sunshine, through prosperity and adversity, always growing stronger as the years go by. Love, which is founded upon mutual respect and the admiration of moral worth, will live when beauty is lost and vanity dead. Again, he says, "So ought men to love their wives, even as their own bodies." There is another test. How many can walk up to that without flinching?

Tobacco and whiskey would be neglected sometimes if this advice were followed, for women do like to have their husbands clean and sober. How many men, think you, would tolerate a wife that chewed tobacco, or kiss a rosy mouth polluted with the filthy weed? No wonder men can't kiss each other!

Again, in the last verse of the chapter, the Apostle repeats his charge, to render it if possible more emphatic: "Nevertheless let every one of you in particular so love his wife, even as himself, and the wife see that she reverence her husband." We can't object to that. When man places himself upon the Bible pedestal, and shapes his conduct by the high standard that inspiration has given, woman will gladly reverence him.

No man who is truly worthy the affection of a noble woman is obliged to complain of a lack of respect on her part. Woman will reverence man if he will allow her to do so. She clings to him even in his vices; and if he filled the grand ideal of Paul, he would rejoice in a love and happiness of which very few of them have any conception.

Paul was one of the earliest advocates of "Woman's rights;" he says, "There is neither male nor female, but ye are all one in Christ." There's equality for you—how can it be expressed more strongly? Because a woman is taught to respect her husband—because she was forbidden to habitually speak in public, or to interfere with matters which it was a man's business to attend to, it does not follow that when God fitted her for any work she was denied the privilege of using her gift. Anna was allowed to prophecy in the temple as well as Simeon, and Paul commends several women for their efficiency in teaching the Word.

His prohibition of a woman's prophesying or praying with her head uncovered is certainly an acknowledgment of her right to do so under proper regulation. He does not claim that she is of less importance than man, but that she is and should be more modest, hence he desires her to be veiled, in accordance with the Oriental customs on appearing in public.

The Bible gives to woman a position of delicacy and also of dignity, while it admonishes her to act with becoming modesty and self-respect. Surely she must be very far "out of her sphere" who finds fault with its perfect consistency.

NOTE.—The foregoing article was taken from some paper several years since. We have a number of times picked it up, glanced at it, and laid it by again. There are a few things in it that might have been omitted, or said in a different way; but we give it just as we find it, without comment, praise or censure, and we hope our readers will not suffer by its perusal.

J. W. B.

The Romeward Tide of Ritualism.

Monsignor Capel, not long since, claimed that out of the two hundred and sixty-four priests in the diocese of Winchester, forty six had been ministers of the Church of England. He alleged, also, that no week went by without his receiving into the communion of Rome, from three to four persons from the Ritualistic party.

The New York Methodist furnishes several specimens of the religious literature put into circulation by that party; and he who reads them will wonder, not that so many, but that no more, instances of shameful apostacy from Protestantism occur under their influence. Take, for example, an extract from a hymn book printed privately by the clergy of St. Augustine's Kilburn, "for the use of the children of the church." in which the efficacy of priestly absolution is taught:

"Yes, I am going to God's priest,
To tell him all my sin,
And from this very hour I'll strive
A new life to begin.

"When I confess with contrite heart
My sins unto the priest,
I do believe from all their guilt
That moment I'm released."

Take, again, an invocation of the Virgin Mary as found in "Prayers for Children," published by a Doctor of Canon Law of the Established Church:

"Mother of mercy, day by day,
My love for thee grows more and more;
Thy gifts are strewn upon my way,
Like sands upon the great sea-shore.

Get me the grace to love thee more;
Jesus will give if thou will plead:
And, Mother, when life's cares are o'er,
Oh! I shall love thee then indeed."

Such outcroppings of fatal Romish heresy are sufficiently numerous, in Ritualistic literature, to "fatigue public disgust;" and this disgust may allay the apprehension of mischief from them—for in the feeling of contempt, the feeling of fear is (sometimes most unwisely) lost. Our readers, therefore, may glance over them with the equanimity with which, in his quiet humor, Charles Lamb once said he could always hear of an earthquake in China. But there seems to be a taint of Ritualism in the very air now-a-days; and if we are not faithful in the advocacy and diligent in the diffusion of vital evangelical truth, these prayers and hymns may lead our children's children from Christ to Anti Christ. Let every lover of the one saving faith, then, cry aloud against this deadly counterfeit, and spare not, and faint not.—Christian Index.

Thoughts on Close Communion.

The following is clipped from the Index and Baptist. In this age of trickery, when Satan takes every mean advantage, and resorts to almost every imaginable strategy, it is necessary to be armed with every weapon of defence. To us it seems, that the pleas for free communion are intended to lead us away from the line of consistency, or to reproach us. How can there be communion where there is no union?

"I have but one objection to you Baptists; I can't believe in your close communion." How often do we hear this thread-bare objection to the Baptists repeated; and yet we have not one single peculiarity more in harmony with the practice of the first Christians. Baptists are called close communionists because they do not invite all who claim to be Christians, nor even all whom they are free to recognize as such; while Pedo-baptists are called free communionists because they do invite all such. Who are right? "To the law and to the testimony." How readest thou?" Paul says, "If a man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother." 2. Thess. 3: 14, 15.

Does not the above passage show that obedience is necessary to communion? A man may be a brother, that is, a professed Christian, aye, a Baptist (for there were no Pedo-baptists then), and yet not entitled to the communion because of his disobedience to the teachings of Scripture.

If we must "note" him, "and have no company with him," then, certainly, we must not commune with him; but, still, by denying him the communion, we do not unchristianize him, but "admonish him as a brother." Do you ask, how is the above Scripture any bar to the free communion of Baptists and Pedobaptists? I answer, if we are right in our views, they do not obey the teachings of the apostles, and hence we should not invite them to the communion; but, if they are right in their views, we do not obey the teachings of the apostles, and hence they should not invite us to the communion. We say apostles enjoined the baptism of believers, and that Pedobaptists make this commandment void by the sprinkling of infants, but we can not bear witness to this truth so long as we invite them to the communion. They say the apostles enjoined the sprinkling of infants, or the application of water to infants, in the name of the Trinity, and that we "obey not" in this particular. Hence, they should not invite us, neither should we invite them, while we count not each other as enemies, but admonish one another as brethren. We should love one another all the better for being faithful to our principles. There should be no free communion between us until we can harmonize in our views in reference to the commands of Christ and the apostles.

If a Baptist minister were to sprinkle water on infants, in God's name, we would "note that man;" and if a Pedobaptist minister were to refuse the same thing, we should "note" him. Should their ministers be better in our esteem than Baptist ministers, or should we be better in their esteem than their own ministers? In order to be "free," should we tolerate in them what we deny to our ministers; or should they allow in us what they refuse to their own? Where is the law of charity that requires us to commune with them while they practice that for which we would withdraw ourselves from a Baptist preacher? And where is the rule requiring them to commune with us so long as we persistently disregard the command to sprinkle infants, if, as they say, such command can be shown?

The apostles enjoined the sprinkling of water on infants, or they did not? If they did not, we should "note" those who practice it in the name of the holy Trinity; but, if they did, Pedobaptists should "note" us for its neglect. In no case, however, should we regard each other as enemies, but we should "admonish" each other as brethren, that they may be "ashamed" of its neglect. We should all alike remember one thing, namely, the communion was never instituted as a test of Christian fellowship, and it is nowhere taught in Scripture that all Christians should commune together. Do you say it is? Where? The phrase free communion is not in all the Bible. Where? If you can not find it there, why do you so berate us for being consistent? The design of the Lord's supper (bread and wine) is to show forth the Lord's death till he comes again.

H. F. BUCKNER.

For the COMPANION.

A Response.

On page 700, No. 44, brother M. M. Eshleman preaches a kindly sermon, using for his text one of my weak articles (which appeared in No. 40). The brother starts out by quoting one of my sentences, and then adds: "This, with some of the previous arguments of our brother, argues that the more classically educated and polished this lump of clay is, the more useful and influential it will be." I am not aware that I used the word "classical" in my essay. I do not think that the institution that we most need must necessarily be a "classical" institution. However, had I argued what brother E. says I did, I should hardly be willing to recant, especially if the words truly religious be retained in the connection in which they are found. Certainly a truly religious man is all the better and the more influential and useful for being refined and educated. Remember, I do not say "classically educated"; but I should feel quite free to do so—especially if one of Webster's definitions of the word classical be accepted:—conforming to the best authority in literature and art; chaste; pure; refined." What a noble education that would be! And what a noble school that would be in which such an education could be received!

Brother E. next asks, "Do we not know that these things are highly esteemed among men?" No; at least all men do not esteem them. The Turk, the Hottentot and the savage, for example, know but little about these things, and we suspect that it is all the worse for them that they don't know more. The extent of their ignorance of these things measures pretty accurately the extent of their degradation. If a thing be good, it is certainly all the better for men if they esteem it. Surely it is time that we make some little discrimination in the application of such passages as that upon which brother E. seems to have an argument: "Whatsoever is highly esteemed among men, is abomination in the sight of God." I dare say brother E. would not think of calling life, health and friends an abomination; and yet these things are much more highly esteemed among men than are education, "missions," "Sunday-schools," and the like.

But brother E. says, "Are not men grasping for refined, well-polished education every day? Then are they not abominations in the sight of God?" Mere repetition of this is sufficient refutation. And similar to this, in my humble judgment, is the far-fetched, forced construction placed upon the "three unclean spirits." Brother, it seems to me that such loose statements don't prove anything, except the weakness of your side of the question. Could you not apply the same scripture with equal propriety to any other three things that you might choose to regard as evils?

I shall next notice the objection to my saying that "we can draw into the church by this agency (educational facilities) and by this alone," certain parties not now in the church, and that are not likely ever to be in. The chief object in view when I commenced this essay was to offer some explanation on this point. I too believe that no one comes to Christ except the Father draw him; and I do not think that my statement implies, much less does it affirm, anything to the contrary.

Brother E. seems to think I am advocating an educated ministry; but why he should think so I can hardly imagine. I had no thought in that direction. What I meant was this: If we had a good school, it would receive the patronage of some who belong to no church, and whose children will embrace the doctrine of those under whose influence they are placed. For, reason about it as we will, the church relations of perhaps nine out of ten depend more upon early impressions than upon anything else. God compels no one to join a church against his inclination, or will, and these are, to a great degree, creatures of habit and education.

Again, a good school would receive the patronage of some who belong to other denominations, and the same imperceptible influence that now leads Brethren's children to unite with those whose schools they attend, would then lead some of those attending the Brethren's school to embrace the faith and practice there taught and exemplified. There could hardly be anything objectionable in this method of drawing others to a place where they would be taught, at least, to respect what we regard as the true faith and doctrine, and where prejudices might be removed that would otherwise keep them out of the church as effectually as if the drawings of the Father should never be felt. In view of these facts is there anything out of place—is it "putting the matter too strongly" to speak of "the need of having a good educational institution among us, in order that we may hold and develop, not only the intellect that is now in the church and that seeks educational facilities, but also that which we can draw into the church by this agency, and by this alone?"

There are other things in brother E.'s article that I would like to notice, but as the above is all that more especially concerns my essay, and as this hasty article is already long enough, I will close for a little season. But I will add, that, though I do not agree with brother E. on the subject of education, I respect the sincere Christian spirit that he seems to possess, and I am glad that he has stated his views. May others do likewise. Discussion elicits truth; and TRUTH is bound to triumph in the end.

J. M. ZUCK.

Lebanon, Ohio.

For the COMPANION.

Lay not up Treasures upon Earth

Lay not up treasures upon earth, where moth and rust do corrupt, and theives break through and steal. This is what the Bible teaches us, and what it says is true; and yet some people will hoard up money, all to no purpose. How much better to aid the suffering and needy than to hoard up riches. Let us open our purses and hearts to the needy, and then we will lay up treasures in heaven. There moth and rust do not corrupt, and theives do not break through and steal. The cent may accumulate to the dollar, and the dollar a hundred, and still the miser goes on saving. The dollar is more to the miser than his soul's salvation; while the suffering poor would be glad to have a cent. And we often find it to be the case, that the most wealthy give least to the poor. How can people expect a home in heaven, when they make an idol of their money? Rich people seem to have no thought for the poor. They seldom wend their way through narrow streets into attics to cheer the widow or comfort the orphan: all their mind is occupied about their riches. May Heaven send some love to the wealthy for the poor, and open their hearts to them, that they may obtain a reward more precious than silver or gold, that never shall fade, but endure forever. All the treasures of this earth are nothing to what we might have by a little benevolence. We never lose by giving to the poor; it will all be made up to us; it will make our crowns brighter and cheer the hearts of the poor.

Scatter blessings in thy pathway;
Gentle words and cheering smiles,
Better are than gold and silver,
With thy grief-dispelling wiles.
As the pleasant sunshine falleth
Ever on the grateful earth,
So let sympathy and kindness
Gladden well the darkened hearth.

Hearts there are, o'erpressed and weary;
Drop the tear of sympathy;
Whisper words of hope and comfort.
Give, and thy reward shall be
Joy unto thy soul returning,
From this perfect fountain head:
Freely as thou freely givest
Shall the grateful light be shed.

CARRIE L. ROELKEY.

New Market, Md.

Things that are Coming.

Manhood will come, old age will come, and the dying bed will come; and the very last look you shall ever cast upon your acquaintances, will come. The agony of the parting breath and the time when you are stretched a lifeless corpse before the eyes of weeping relatives will come; and the coffin that is to enclose you will come. The hour when they will assemble to carry you to the church-yard will come; the minute when you shall be put in the grave will come: and the throwing in of the loose earth into the narrow house where you are laid, and the spreading of the green sod over it—all, all will come on every living creature who now hears me; and in a few little years the minister who now speaks, and the people who now listen, will be carried to their long home, and make room for another generation.

Now, all this you know must and will happen: your common sense and common experience serve to convince you of it. Perhaps it may have been little thought of in the days of careless, and thoughtless, and thankless unconcern, which you have spent hitherto; but I call upon you to think of it now; to lay it seriously to heart, and not longer to trifle and delay. When the high matters of death, and judgment, and eternity are thus set so evidently before you, and the tidings, wherewith I am charged, the blood lieth upon your own head and not upon mine, if you will not listen to them. The object of my coming among you is, to let you know what more things are to come; it is to carry you beyond the regions of faith, and to assure you, in the name of him who cannot lie, that, as sure as the hour of laying the body in the grave comes, so surely will also come the hour of the spirit returning to the God who gave it. Yes, and the day of final reckoning will come; and the appearance of the Son of God in heaven and his mighty angels around him will come; and the opening of the books will come, and the standing of the men of all generations before the judgment seat will come; and the solemn passing of that sentence which is to fix you for eternity will come.—Sel.

WM. S. MEYERS.

For the COMPANION.

Political Strife.

It is dangerous to vote, or to encourage such an act, under a war government, for any purpose, however proper or good in itself considered, when liable to involve political strife.

To attempt to force men to abstain from the sale or use of alcoholic drink, by making laws to be enforced under a war system, might tend to lay the foundation of rebellion, as truly as the efforts to abolish slavery did. This is no visionary idea: it has been proved by sad experience. Many men of good intentions, in former years, by taking an active part in seeking by their right of suffrage to eradicate slavery from the country, while under a military government, have laid the temptation to yield to the war system to accomplish their purpose; and it has resulted in one of the most horrid and bloody butcheries the country ever witnessed. When we know what has passed, how can we venture again into such a broad way leading to destruction? We earnestly caution and entreat all those who do not want another bloody rebellion, to shun the first steps towards such a calamity. "It is an honor to cease from strife," Prov. 20: 3. "Leave off contention before it be meddled with;" 7: 14. Cease to vote or to take any active part in war government. Were the principles of warfare or human butchery totally eradicated from government, it might be safe to co-operate in political affairs in projecting any reform; but while it is no, it is quite unsafe and wholly inconsistent for the followers of the Prince of Peace. We think it proper for all true friends of peace to hold on to the peace principle, and avoid taking any part in what may lead to carnal war. We should shun the place of political suffrage as truly as we should the house of "the young wanton," fearing the end might be deplorable. "Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death;" Prov. 7: 27. So is every place where the elementary principles of war originate. It is political strife in making laws, then of putting them in force; the next step is frequently attended with human butchery. The only proper way is to seek to God for help, and to obey his word.

T. F. TUKESBURY.

Brentwood, N. H.

For the COMPANION.

Death.

Death is a solemn word; yet so many pay no heed to it. Although there are so many deaths in our land, yet sinners heed it not; for they will think, "To-morrow I will give my heart to God." When the next day arrives, it is the same. O, sinners, I warn you to flee from the wrath to come; or in the judgment day God will say to you, "Depart from me, I never knew you, ye that work iniquity."

We little think of death. Not many weeks ago I over-heard one of my companions saying to another, "Did you ever think what way you are taking?" "Oh, yes, I have often thought of it, but I have been putting it off; I was ashamed to let my gay companions know that I thought or had any such thoughts; for then they would have left me, scorned me. But, how different! But now it is too late. for I am nearly there. I never thought of death, but now it is too late, too late! Many are enjoying themselves in gambling, while others are around the remains of their dear ones, weeping bitterly. Some indulge in DRUNKENNESS, while their families at home are dying for the want of food, or freezing for the want of fuel. Others enjoy the fashions of the world and the lust thereof, but not many think of the terrible word, DEATH. May we all think of this fact. Revelation 14: 12, "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." May we all be so unspeakably happy as to meet in heaven, is the prayer of your unworthy sister,

E. B. CHURCHILL.

PRIDE.—God crowns with mercy, says Jenkyn; but a swollen head is not fit to have that crown put upon it. A proud man is seldom a grateful man; for he never thinks he gets as much as he deserves. When any mercy falls, he says, "Yes; but it ought to be more. It is only manna as large as a coriander seed, whereas it ought to be a baker's loaf."

Trust in God.

Leave God to order all thy ways,
And hope in him, whate'er betide;
Thou'l't find him in the evil days
An all sufficient strength and guide,
Who trusts in God s unchanging love,
Builds on the rock that naught can move.

What can these anxious cares avail,
There never-ceasing moans and sighs
What can it help us to bewail
Each painful moment as it flies?
Our cross and trials do but press
The heavier for our bitterness.

Only your restless heart keep still,
And wait in cheerful hope content,
To take whate'er his gracious will,
His all-discerning love hath sent;
Nor doubt our inmost wants are known
To him who chose us for his own.

He knows when joyful hours are best,
He sends them as he sees it meet;
When thou hast borne its fiery test,
And now art freed from all deceit,
He comes to thee all unaware,
And makes thee own his loving care.

Nor in the heat of pain and strife,
Think God has cast thee off unheard;
Nor that the man whose prosperous life
Thou enviest, is of him preferred;
Time passes,and much change doth bring
And sets a bound to everything.

All are alike before his face;
'Tis easy to our God Most High
To make the rich man poor and base,
To give the poor man wealth and joy.
True wonders still of him are wrought,
Who setteth up and brings to naught.

Sing, pray, and swerve not from his ways,
But do thine own part faithfully;
Trust his rich promises of grace,
So shall it be fulfilled in thee,
God never yet forsook at need
The soul that trusted him indeed.

For the COMPANION.

Let us Work Together in Love.

Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another." Rom. 12: 9, 10.

The above text is one of the many which the faithful apostle Paul uttered to the Roman brethren, in the days when the Christian church was yet in its infancy; and we believe it is just as necessary to remind us of its contents, in this our day of iniquity and abomination, as ever.

How oft are we pained to see the reverse practiced. In this our day, people would far rather make the text read: "Let love be with much dissimulation. Abhor that which is good; cleave to that which is evil. Be contentiously affectioned one to another with much caviling; in honor preferring ourselves." It is not at all uncommon, in this age of the world, for professed followers of Christ (and even of the same church) to open batteries upon their fellow members and storm them by force; for what, we know not, except it be to make a great parade before the world and to expose their ignorance.

How oft do we see it, when someone is trying to put his fellow beings in remembrance of their duties, and admonishing them to be on their guard against the evil spirits, which roam in the children of disobedience, and is trying to help to build up the Lord's house, before he is rightly done with his work, another, who professeth to be of the same faith, will come down upon him like a thunderbolt and try to shiver everything to atoms again, as though he was commissioned from the Supreme Power to do so: But let us not fear; for so it must come in the last days; "and because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." Matt. 24: 12. And the spirit of disobedience is in such a prosperous condition, that, when a man utters a phrase or expresses a sentiment, others are ready, in abundance, to receive misconceived ideas, and place misconstructions on it, and criticise, and ask the whys and the wherefores, and begin to reason—not with season itself, but with their own carnal minds; and if any projections be left whereof they can take hold, they will close their fangs on it with a death-like grasp, and devour it like a carniverous beast does its prey. The apostle Jude no doubt would also class them with those of whom he said, "They are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: Clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth. * * raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars," who "speak evil of those things which they know not," &c.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us all try to work together in love. Let us search the scriptures well, so that we may know what is required of us, and then, if we see anything that is not altogether talked or written to the point, we can add the balance by thought. For if we are born of the same Spirit, we have also gone to the same school-master; and if we belong to Christ, we will try to exercise charity; and "charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, (is not rash,) is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth." Let us all pray to be filled with the good fruit of charity.

L. ANDES.

Lincoln, Pa.

Christ's Epistles.

As our Lord left no monument of Himself in brass or marble, so He left no letters written by His own hand. He did not write his mind on tables of stone or on sheets of parchment. Even Rome, with all her rage for relics, does not pretend to show a specimen of His hand-writing. Yet, He has not left Himself without a witness. He has left letters behind Him which truly reveal His mind: "Ye are epistles of Christ." Disciples, when He desires to let the world know what He is, He points to you. Nay, more and further, when He would have the Father to behold His glory, He refers him to the saved: "Father, I am glorified in them." It is not only that the world, in point of fact, judges of Christianity by what they see in Christians, but they have authority so to do. The Lord Himself consented that they should read Him there.

So Jesus sends a letter to the world—sends many letters—sends a letter to every city, and every street and every house. A merchant who is a disciple of Christ, goes to India or China. He sells manufactured goods; he buys silk and tea. But all the time he is a letter, a living epistle, sent by Christ to the heathen. A boy becomes an apprentice in a warehouse or factory; but before he was bound to a master on earth, he had been redeemed by a Master in heaven. He is now, therefore, a letter from the Lord to all his shopmates. In his truth, and love, and gentleness, and fairness, and generosity, they should learn the mind of Christ. I confess that this thought is fitted to make us afraid. How shall we fulfill such a function? The solution is, it is the Lord's own method. He has chosen earthen vessels in order that the glory may be of God.—Arnot.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Nov. 18, 1873.

Editorial Correspondence.

In my last I omitted to notice a visit to an aged and afflicted sister, widow of brother Emmanuel Beuchly, deceased a few years ago. She has been quite poorly for the past summer, and is now, apparently, near the end of her pilgrimage. She enjoys the visits of the brethren and sisters.

After dining at brother John Spicher's, who is one of the ministers of this Waterloo congregation, we spent part of the afternoon in interviewing the city of Waterloo. Spent the night at Dr. John A. Beuchly's.

Tuesday, 28. Brother Buechly accompanied me to the office of the Courier, and introduced me to Mr. Woodruff, one of the editors, with whom we had a pleasant conversation. He is a man fully competent to fill the editorial chair. Hope he will be successful in all his good undertakings.

Thence in company with brother Beuchley's, to brother Michael Reber's. Here we had a feast, special. upon the occasion of our departure. Besides the company mentioned, brother Jacob Murray, and brother John M. Snyder, ministers, were also present. Brother Charlie Roberts, was invited but failed, likely on account of a press in business, being a clerk in an enterprising business house in Waterloo. We had a pleasant time, and we hope sister Reber may be blessed for her liberality. We then took our departure from this house, which began to twine around our affections like our own home. Brother B. returned us to town, to the house of brother Ephraim Spicher's. Here several brethren and sisters met and we had a pleasant evening. After a few hours rest, we took the train, on Wednesday, 29th, at 3 a. m.

We have now bid farewell to Black Hawk county, where we have spent many pleasant days. Although we have only been here a few weeks, we think we know nearly as many people in this county as we do in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, excepting Dale City. Taking all things into consideration, we doubt whether there is a county in Iowa, or any other western state, which can surpass Black Hawk. Of course we have not yet seen all the western country, and so cannot pass an intelligent judgment; but this country has an advantage that few have, namely, the large membership, giving it a first class society. The next great advantage is the healthfulness of the climate. This is indeed a great consideration. That it is healthy, the Brethren, the physicians, and our own observation, all testify. Waterloo is an enterprising town, very pleasantly situated, on Cedar River. There is a great amount of business transacted here. If the same number of wagons were to come to one of our eastern cities, we would conclude that a circus or a political convention was on hand, even then it would be considered an unusual occasion. The people of Waterloo are very sociable, and we are inclined to regard it as a very pleasant place to live at.

At about six o'clock in the morning we landed at Cedar Rapids. Elder E. K. Beuchly was in our company, being on his way to the Linn county lovefeast. Brother Thomas G. Snyder met us at the station and took us to his house about seven miles north. Here we spent a pleasant time until Thursday, 30th, when brother Snyder took us to brother Daniel Holsinger's, about four miles south-east. Here we were among our relatives and brethren. The day and evening were spent in pleasant conversation.

Friday, 31st. Cousin Jacob took us to Cedar Rapids, to interview the town. Visited both the printing offices, which gave evidence of prosperity. The city is finely located, and is situated on the Cedar River. The river has numerous rapids, and therefore affords abundant water power. One of the great money-making institutions of the town is a pork factory. More than a thousand hogs are slaughtered daily, during the season, and more or less all the time. It looks murderous to see a man "stick" from one to two hogs every minute, making that his exclusive business. This business makes money twice; first for the butchers, and then for the doctors by sowing the seeds of scrofula and other diseases.

We also visited Marion, the county seat of Linn county. Marion is a very nice little town of several thousand inhabitants; and if the county seat were permanently located, it would be somewhat tempting to us to locate there. But we fear that will be removed to Cedar Rapids before many months, which would leave Marion a deserted village.

Thence we returned to brother Holsinger's and thence to school-house No. 7, near brother Thomas Snyder's where we attended an evening meeting. Brother John Murray, of Marshall county, and E. K. Buechley were present. Attendance, &c good. All night at brother Snyder's.

Saturday Nov. 1. Brother S. took us to the meeting house of the Linn county congregation, where the Brethren had appointed to hold their Lovefeast, to commune at 10 A. M. In due time the people assembled, and sdrvices were begun. Ministers present: Murray and Buechley, already named, Peter Forney,—Troxel, of Benton Co., J. S. Snyder, of Poweshiek, and Mohler, of Keokuk. The ministers in this branch are Abraham and Solomon Stamy, T. G. Snyder, Daniel Holsinger, ank John S. Miller. We all labored, we presume, to the best of our ability. Had a very good meeting which was well attended. Lodged at brother Thomas Harrison's, who ministered the same kindness which we have met everywhere.

Sunday 2nd. Attended preaching at the same place in the forenoon. The afternoon we spent at the house of brother Abraham Stamy, as he and sister Holsinger claim some kinsmanship. In the evening we returned with brother Holsinger's to their home, where we had our last social evening for our present visit to Iowa. Spent a pleasantevening, though we passed sad thoughts and words upon the subject of parting friends.

Monday 3rd. Cousin Jacob (brother would be a nearer kin than cousin, though we would prefer both) again took us to Cedar Rapids, where we took the cars at six A. M., and at 11 we were at Burlington, where we must remain until 7 20 this evening, when we expect to take the train for Omaha. It is a long wait, but it afforded us a splendid opportunity to write out this report, as we had good facilities in the Burlington & Missouri River R. R. depot.

And now good bye, brethren and sisters of Iowa. Many thanks to you for you labors of love to us. It has been intimated that the Iowa sisters are remiss in some of their duties; but we can assure our readers that it is not in performing the part of Martha to their friends and guests. And as to piety, and devotion to the cause of Christ, and obedience to his word, we think they are equal to any whom we have visited. We of course speak only of those with whom we became acquainted. Indeed we think the Brethren of Iowa deserve to be praised for the progress they are making extending the borders of Zion. It will not be many years, if they continue to labor, adding a little zeal, until the Iowa membership will outnumber that of Pennsylvania. May the Lord bless them. and prosper them spiritually and temporally, is the prayer of

H. R. HOLSINGER.

Burlington, Nov. 3d.

Salutation.

The readers of the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION have already learned that we have purchased this paper of brother Holsinger and design to edit and publish it. And, although we do not get possession of the office and press until the close of the present volume, which will be about the middle of December, yet, as we were requested by brother Holsinger to take charge of the office at an earlier day that we may acquaint ourself with the office and work, and make the necessary preparations for the next volume, we have complied with his request and are now in our new field of labor and wish to make a friendly communication to the readers of the C. F. C.

An experience of seventeen years in the trials, perplexities. responsibilities, and labors of an editor's life, has taught us that the position is not a desirable one when duty does not demand the sacrifice. And thinking perhaps the Gospel Visitor, the periodical with which as editor we have been connected the length of time above named, had done its work, or at least our work with it had been done, we had serious thoughts of retiring from the editorship of the Visitor, and had no thoughts of renewing our editorial labors in any other field. But learning that brother Holsinger had some thoughts of retiring from the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION, the thought of taking his place as editor of that paper sprung up in our mind. We say sprung up, for surely the thought itself was of quick growth, though the maturing of that thought into decisive action required some time. There was no difficulty in brother Holsinger and myself coming to an agreement, and hence we are entering upon the new field of labor we are.

From our first connection with the church of Christ we have felt like serving it and rendering ourself useful in it. And our studies and labors were in some degree chosen and directed in preparing ourself for the work that duty seemed to call us to perform. And as our editorial labors do not seem to be completed yet, but in the providence of God we seem to be called to a position in which increased editorial labors will devolve upon us, we shall dedicate ourself anew to this work in the church, and shall labor awhile yet in this calling if our life is spared, hoping that the Lord is now preparing younger brethren to perform the editorial work of the church as well as for other departments of Christian labor, who will be better qualified to perform this work than we are. In the meanwhile, we shall labor to the best of our ability to render the paper we have taken charge of useful to the church as an auxiliary to the ministry in promoting the spread of Christian truth.

There are, no doubt, those among the readers of the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION, who may wonder what the character of the paper will be under the new administration of its affairs. For the satisfaction of such, as well as for the general satisfaction and information of our readers, we offer a few remarks. Many readers of the C. F. C. know us personally, and still a larger number have some knowledge of us by our humble productions through the press. We hope our past course will be a sufficient pledge for the future. We have tried to labor, and we shall still do so, to promote peace, purity, charity, uniformity and all the Christian graces in the church, and to bring aliens within its fold. Or, should it be more satisfactory, we will say, we shall labor to promote the principles enunciated in the following language of brother Holsinger, occurring in his Prospectus of the C. F. C. and containing the principles for the defense and spread of which, the paper was established, by him. "The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion. It assumes that that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feetwashing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ."

Such being the principles to which our paper is devoted, and to the promotion of which our labors will be directed, we hope we shall have, not only the patronage of all our old subscribers, but that of many new ones.

We design to unite the Gospel Visitor with the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION, and publish them as one paper weekly. By this arrangement the talent that heretofore has been divided between the two papers, will be combined, and we hope this union will increase the usefulness of both.

Brother Beer, who has been for some time in the office of the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION, will be retained in the office. His experience and devotion to the cause we are laboring to promote are such that his continued services will, no doubt, be acceptable to our readers. And we hope the experience and knowledge of brother Holsinger will not be altogether lost to the C. F. C. and G. V. whatever course they may take, as we shall be glad to avail ourselves of them when we can, and we are glad to believe they will be at our service, since he will not cease to feel an interest in a work to which he has given the thought and labor he has given to the C. F. C.

All letters pertaining to business connected with the present volume of the C. F. C., or the office for the current year, should still be addressed to brother Holsinger. But all letters, communications, remittance &c., concerning the next volume of the C. F. C. and G. V., or connected with the office after the close of the present volume, should be addressed to us. And now may the grace of God rest upon us all and crown with success all our efforts to promote his glory.

JAMES QUINTER.

Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa.
Nov. 11th, 1873.

Our Arrival at Dale City.

We left our home on the 7th inst. and arrived in Dale City on the 8th, to commence our labors in this new field of duty. We were kindly received by our friends and welcomed among them. We feel quite comfortable and are enjoying ourself as well as we could expect to do under the present circumstances. Our family is not here. Our presence was needed here to prepare for the next volume of our paper, and as we had no house selected for our family, we thought it best to leave it in Ohio. As we must return to Ohio in a few days, we expect to bring our family with us when we come here again, which will be in a week or two, if no providence hinders, and if we can attain a house to live in.

As we said above, we are quite comfortable here, having much to make us comfortable. Still when we think of being separated from dear Christian friends in Ohio,—friends with whom we have long associated and with whom we have often worshipped,—we cannot help but feel sorrowful. We feel an attachment to the Covington church, and regret that circumstances seem to require our separation from it. We shall continue to cherish a regard for it, and hope that the Lord will bless it still as he has in times past done, with peace, prosperity and increase. Not only do we remember with tender feeling our Christian friends about Covington, but there are many outside of the church whose kind regard to us we reciprocate.

Well, since the "world is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," wherever our lots may be cast, we may share the blessings of the Lord. And not only may we share in the blessings of the Lord, but the Lord himself may be ours. Every pious soul can say with David, "Thou art my portion, O Lord." And in a higher and fuller sense still, will be ours, when we shall be brought to that world where everything reflects his glory.

J. Q.

Our Prospectus for 1874.

With the present number of the C. F. C. we send out our Prospectus to our agents and to many others. We also send an envelope already addressed to make it as convenient as possible for our friends to respond to our call. We now hope that when the present number is received, and when our friends have become acquainted with our purposes and wishes, they will go to work with becoming zeal, and canvass for subscribers. Do not confine your labors to members of the church. Many others may subscribe for it if they are properly approached. Remember but little can be accomplished in this world without much labor. If then you desire to see our enterprise succeed, as you no doubt do, give it your attention and effort. Please let us hear from you at as early a day as possible. We shall appreciate your labors for us, and be thankful for them.

Our Almanac for 1874.

We would remind our friends, and all who desire to have the Brethren's Almanac for 1874, that we shall soon be ready to send it out. We therefore solicit orders. We are getting up a tolerably large edition, and think they will be useful, not only in their character as a Calendar, but in other respects. Every member of the church should have one. And the low price at which we offer them, puts them within reach of all. Send in your orders accompanied by the cash.

Terms: One copy, 10 cents; six copies 40 cents; 12 copies 75 cents.

The Brethren's New Hymn Book.

I wish to make a proposition for the consideration of the brotherhood, hoping to hear something on the subject through the COMPANION. Would it not be well to have our Hymn Books gotten up in a smaller form—printed on fine paper, with small type, and with less space between the hymns? The objection to the present form of the books is, that it is too thick to carry in the pocket conveniently. This is my opinion, and that of others whom I have talked with on the subject. Brethren, let us hear from you.

A BROTHER.

REPLY.—In answer to the foregoing proposition we would just say, that, we think, the only improvement that could be made in that direction at present, would be to use a finer quality of paper; and this has already been done. The Hymn Book has been stereotyped, and hence the size of the type, as well as the space between the hymns, is fixed for the present. It is worthy of consideration, too, that eyes differ, and while some could do very well with finer print, perhaps more would prefer larger. The spaces between the hymns and between the stanzas are as small as can be made without giving it a crowded appearance, and making it, in some respects, at least, inconvenient. Perhaps it would be quite as easy, and would give as general satisfaction, to enlarge pockets a little as to diminish the size of the book.

J. W. B.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Christ our All in All.

I need no other plea
With which to approach my God,
Than his own mercy, boundless, free,
Through Christ on man bestowed;
A Father's love, a Father's care,
Receives and answers every prayer.

I need no other priest
Than one High Priest above;
His intercession ne'er has ceased
Since first I knew his love;
Through that my faith shall never fail,
Even when passing death's dark vale.

I need no human ear
In which to pour my prayer;
My great High Priest is ever near,
On him I cast my care;
To him, him only I confess,
Who only can absolve and bless.

I need no prayers to saints,
Beads, relics, martyr's shrines;
Hardships 'neath which the spirit faints,
Yet still, sore burdened, pines:
Christ's service yields my soul delight,
Easy his yoke, his burden light.

I need no other book
To guide my steps to heaven,
Than that on which I daily look,
By God's own Spirit given;
And this, when he illumes our eyes,
"Unto salvation makes us wise."

I need no priestly mass,
No purgatorial fires,
My soul to anneal, my guilt to efface,
When this brief life expires;
Christ died, my eternal life to win.
His blood has cleansed me from all sin.

Proverbs from the Talmud.

Between the wolf and the shepherd the lamb has come to grief.

One thing acquired with pain, is better than a hundred with ease.

Let the grapes pray for the welfare of the branches; without branches there would be no grapes.

Silence is beautiful in a wise man; but how much more in a fool.

More than the calf wishes to drink, the cow wishes to give it suck.

If they tell you that your friend is dead, believe it; that he has come into a fortune, doubt it.

He who lends money to the poor is often better than he who gives them alms.

Here is a table and and knives; but we no mouths to eat.

Be prudent and silent.

The world is like the wheel of the well, with its two buckets; the full one is ever emptied, and the empty one is ever filled.

A quarrel is like a spirt of water issuing from a cleft; wider and wider gets the cleft, more and more powerful gets the spirt.

He who has been legally deprived of his ill-gotten garment should go his way rejoicing.

He who has learnt and does not teach is like a myrtle in the desert.

There is a threefold death in the slanderer's tongue: it kills him who slanders, him who is slandered, and him who receives the slander.

Some people's judgment is that of a blind man at a window.

You cannot touch a fool: a dead man's body does not feel the knife.

For a man who has been ruined by woman there is no law and no judge.

Many an arrow-smith is shot by his own arrows.

Greater is he who causes good deeds than he who does them.

Great is peace: it is to the land what leven is to the dough.

He who struts about the market in the philosopher's toga, will not come into the dwelling-place of God.

Woman spins her little web, while she talks.

Throw no stones into the well whence you have drunk.

A small allowance at home is much better than a large one abroad.

He is a bookcase, not a scholar.

Cut off his head, but mind you don't kill him.

It is the hole that makes the thief.

In his own house the weaver is king.

The salt of money is almsgiving.

A hundred shillings invested in trade will give a man meat and wine; in acres, it will give him cabbage and salt.

When the axe already touches thy neck, still hope in God's saving grace.

Flight is the beginning of defeat.

Hang the sweetest grass around a pig's neck, it will still go and wallow in its native mire.

The lives of three are no lives; that of the too compassionate, of the man with a temper, and the misanthrope.

Poor is only he who lacks common sense.

Three men are beloved by God: he who is of a sweet temper, he who is moderate in his habits, and he who does not always obstinately adhere to his first resolves.

If the old people tell you to pull down, and the young ones to build up: pull down.

You must not drink out of one cup, and look at another.

He who cannot moderate his grief will soon have a new grief to weep over.

Where Satan cannot go himself, he takes wine as his messenger.

Whoever has been bitten by a serpent is afraid of a rope.

He who has bread in his basket should not be compared to him who has not: (though neither be hungry at the time.)

When the jackel has his day, make him a bow.

The way man wishes to go, thither his feet will carry him.

Seven years lasted the famine, but no workman starved; seven years lasted the plague, but no one died before his time.

An old man in the house is a sorrow to the house; an old woman in the house is a blessing to it.

Honor your wives; they will enrich you.

Eat below your means, dwell according to your means; but spend upon your wife and children above your means.

First understand, then argue.

You must not refute a lion after his death.

Much have I learnt from my masters, more from my colleagues, most from my disciples.

In a quarrel it is always the well born who will first give way.

Do not stand in a place of danger, trusting in miracles.

Iron sharpens iron; scholar the scholar.

Man has been created on the last day; even the gnat is of more ancient lineage.

The thought of the sin is worse than the sin.

Eat quickly, drink quickly: this world is but a brief wedding-feast.

The older the wise man gets, the wiser he grows: the fool, when he ages, becomes but an old fool.

He who studies for a good purpose, to him his study becomes a blessing: to him who does not, it grows into a poison.

Why is the lobe of the ear soft? that you may close up your ear when you hear aught improper.

A bad wife is like a hail-storm.

Do not dwell too long upon your friend's praises: you will end by saying things against him.

Do much for little—so that you do it for a good purpose.

Refined music is liked by refined people—weavers do not much care for it.

Two cry out but get no pity; he who lends out his money without witnesses, and he who cannot get on in one place and does not try another.

Even the common talk of the wise should be pondered over.

Bad servants first ask only when they have already committed the blunder.—Quarterly Review.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Sunday-School Picnics.

We notice in No. 44, page 700, an article, in which the writer seems to wonder when the world had a Sunday-school picnic. I do not wonder when: every picnic ever held, was held by the world, and they are kept up by the world; or, if you would sooner have the term, professed Christian world. They that are not willing to keep all the commandments of the Savior, are not his subjects, so long as they do not belong to his church, consequently belong to this world. We do not know of any halfway place or half Christians. If we are not trying to be full Christians, willing, by the help of God, to follow our Master in all things, then we never came out from the world. These picnics are gotten up by those very characters. Now why should we wonder at a brother for calling it conforming to the world. The writer rather takes advantage of the query, and says, "Our children," instead of "our young members." These young members are not always the brethren's children. However, even our children, whether they belong to the church or not, so long as we have them under our our care, we are in duty bound to try, with all the power, to keep them from the sinful fashions of this world, let them be what they may, whether Sunday-school picnics, fine, fashionable clothing, dancing rooms, whiskey shops, gambling, chewing tobacco, or any other sinful or nasty practice.

Then he asks, "Was not the one great thing in which the apostles differed from other men, after all, the same as the one thing in which Mary and Martha differed—love for the Master?" But does not the Master say, if you love me, keep my commandments? Now if we are not commanded to look different from other men, I do not understand my Bible.

A. H. Hamm.

Cerro Gordo, Ill.

Just What We Need.

In No. 42 we notice an article favoring Sabbath-schools, written by L. Anglemyer. Dear niece, we want ten thousand advocates besides you to defend the cause, as the cause is one of vast importance. Never let any tell you that we have no Bible for a cause conducted like the Sabbath-school. We read in Eph. 6: 4, where we are commanded to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. If any one can tell us better how to do this than we can do it in the Sabbath-school room, let them tell it. One thing I will tell you, the Sabbath-school really is the nursery of the church, when it is in good running order. The Sabbath-school cause must come out victorious, all the opposition of men or the influence against it notwithstanding. There is no earthly use to let our children run out in the world, and become hardened in sin, and then try to bring them back into the church again. The proper way is to keep them in while they are in, and the Sabbath-school room is the place to teach them the ways of the Lord, and when they come to riper years they will not depart from it. If more attention were given to teaching our children that are in the kingdom of Christ, and try to keep them in in place of running out after some hardened sinner, that never was taught in a Sabbath-school, the church would increase much faster. It takes more labor to get one rebel back than it costs to keep five in by the Sabbath-school cause. The cause may be abused, but that is no argument against it. Dear niece, if any oppose you in the cause, treat them kindly, they will all be right after awhile.

M. Hoke.

Huntington, Ind.

Death of Brother J. F. Rohrer.

A cloud has lowered itself upon the church of Antietam, and the family of our beloved brother, Joseph F. Rohrer, who was suddenly plunged into sorrow and mourning. He received, while standing at the sacred desk, holding forth the word of God, a slight intimation of paralysis, commencing in the hand, passing toward the heart, which soon after assumed a dangerous aspect, and on the fifth day after, it terminated in his death, Oct. 6th, 1873. Thus a good man has fallen asleep, soon to awaken in the likeness of his Redeemer, when the chilling mist of death and the gloom of the grave shall flee forever at the bright rising of the sun of eternal day.

Our brother was one of those that was much concerned for the welfare of the church, and held fast to the doctrine that he embraced many years since; and we believe, with such strong confidence in the promises of God to the end.

His funeral was very largely attended. It showed forth as an evidence of his worth and respect as a neighbor, a citizen and a Christian. The family feels a deep loss—our sister a kind husband, the children a loving father—and the church a faithful housekeeper. May the Lord sanctify this bereavement to our best good. Words of comfort were spoken at the funeral, by Elder D. P. Sayler, from 1 Peter 1: 24.

J. F. Oller.

Report to the Middle District of Pennsylvania.

We, the undersigned Committee, appointed by said District to view sites for a church house in the city of Altoona have this day viewed a number of sites. We have found several lots that we think very suitable for the erecting of a house for worship, and have made the following disposition. The Brethren of Altoona not being able to ascertain what could be raised, in consequence of no definite site, we have appointed a purchasing and building committee, with instructions to make the effort to raise sufficient funds, in connection with that subscribed by the District, to purchase one of the sites and build; but if they fail to raise the amount necessary, or a sufficient portion to make it safe, to hold the matter over until next District Meeting, to report to brother G. Brumbaugh, Sec., when he will give publicity, and specify a time when the donations shall be paid over to him.

Committee { Samuel Cox. Conrad Imler. R. McFarland.

Having made it a point in our investigations to learn the feelings of a number of citizens, and the anxiety of the brethren, and the condition of that flourishing city, in general, with the solemn injunction of our blessed Master, "Go into all the world," "teach all nations;" believing the Lord has much people here, we therefore make this appeal to the District, believing it will meet the Divine approbation and discharge its solemn duty to come to the aid of the churches here, that a proper place may be had for the worship of God, and that souls may be taught the knowledge of the Lord. The sympathies for the brethren are strong from those who have a slight knowledge of the humble doctrine of Jesus, and desire to be taught more perfectly. The Macedonian cry from Altoona is, "Come, and help us." May the God of all grace move upon the hearts of all his dear children, to give of their abundance, which may be made effective in saving perishing souls.

Committee { J. W. Brumbaugh. / John Spanogle. / Peter S. Myers.

Revised New Testament.

Brother Holsinger:

The Revised New Testament has become a matter of interest, at least, to me, and I would like to have the opinion of the Brethren on the subject. Have we any right to try to put any different meaning to the New Testament? Would it not have a tendency to lead people astray? Cannot we be satisfied to take the New Testament just as it reads, and draw our own conclusions from the words of our Savior?

Now, brethren, this is a delicate subject, when viewed in the light of revelation, in the language of our Savior. See Revelations 22: 18, 19. I should like to be enlightened on this subject; for I am afraid it would have a tendency to lead people astray. I do not think we have any right to meddle with the New Testament, in trying to revise it in any shape, or to make it any plainer by revising it. Please give me some information on the subject.

Wm. J. Argabrite.

Remarks:—To revise is, to review, to examine with care for correction. The New Testament, or will of God, as made known by his Son, and sealed by his precious blood, is perfect, containing neither too much nor too little, and nothing wrong; therefore it cannot, it dare not, be revised and changed by man. Any change made upon this perfect will, would be to mar its perfection, and to incur the displeasure of the Testator, and the condemnation of God's law. But it is not the object of the revisers to review this will for the purpose of correcting or making any change in it; but to review, examine the former translation, carefully comparing it with the original wording of the will, for the purpose of making it, as far as possible, to harmonize with the original.

In this connection we wish to remind our brother of the fact that King James' Translation is a revision of former translations. Former translations were regarded as being imperfect; and this, together with the changes the language had undergone, suggested the propriety of revision. The revision was made, and its general reception and adoption recommend it as an improvement.

It is the same now. No one will contend that King James' revision is a correct translation; for it is well known, that King James forbade his translators to translate certain words at all. The English language has also undergone many changes since then; and hence the existing state of the language, as well as the imperfections of the received revision, suggests the propriety of a new revision. This is the work of the American Bible Union. The revisers are among the most competent scholars of the day, and no pains have been spared to place in their hands every available means to make the revision as complete as possible. It is not, however, to be supposed that the translation by the American Bible Union is perfect, or that it is even in every case of change an improvement; yet to us it seems that there are many improved readings, which will assist us much in comprehending the perfect will.

J. W. B.

Brother Holsinger:

I paid a visit to the station, in Greene Co., and held a lovefeast on the 18th of Sept. There were about fifty members present at the tables. The order and attention were good. Two made confession, anxious to unite with the Lord's people; one of whom was baptized, and the other will soon be ready. They need help in Greene Co. very much; and I mean to go back. They must be organized more permanently; and I do not see why they do not rise up and call for it. From this we see the propriety of having evangelists, to stir the brethren up to vigilance and duty. Our next District Meeting should have a resolution to this effect. I want to attend if I am spared. We must be watchful, prayerful, and active. Let us throw light on this subject, and may the Lord direct and control our attempts for good. I feel sorry when I notice our forgetfulness. I am only a poor creature and must ever be content to remain such; but when I take of "my own" and give it for Christ's sake, I only give it to the Lord, to receive it back again in golden sheaves. Well, my dear brother, let us be faithful to Jesus in all things. I want to do still more for the cause.

Jos. I. Cover.

Query.

Will some brother or sister give an explanation through the C. F. C. of Luke 14; 26, which reads: "If any man come to me and hata not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple."

Sarah M. Saunders.

Xenia, Ind.

Correction.

In the Report of the Finance Committee several mistakes occur, which we here correct. The Berlin congregation was credited with $221.75. Corrected, $199.00. Error, by over credit, $22.75. This amount, $22.75, should have been credited to the Plumecreek congregation, which had no credit.

Again, the Jacob's Creek congregation had a credit given of $44.75, which should have been $52.75, having paid $8.00, which, however, had not yet been paid over to the treasurer.

Finance Committee, per
S. D. Livengood.

MARRIED.

By the undersigned, at the residence of the bride's parents, near Henrietta, Nov. 2nd, 1873, Mr. John W. Miller of Pattonville, Pa., and Miss Nancy Hoover, of Henrietta, Blair county, Pa.

S. A. Moore.

By the undersigned, on the 19th of October, at the residence of John S. Burger, near New Enterprise, Pa., Mr. John H. Miller and Miss Susan E. Kagarice, all of Bedford county, Pa.

Also, on the same day, and by the same, at the residence of D. B. Snowberger, Mr. David Callithan and Miss Margaret Garretson.

S. A. Moore.

October 21st, at the house of the bride's mother, by Jos. I. Cover, Mr. F. Michael Smith of Salisbury, Pa., and Miss Nancy Johnson, of Fayette county, Pa.

October 23d, by the same, Mr. Walter S. Galentine and Sadie Jane Strickler, both of Tyrone township, Fayette Co., Pa.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Lower Cumberland church, near Boiling Springs, Cumberland county, Pa., Nov. 2d, 1873, Elizabeth, wife of Henry Webbert, sen., aged 72 years 9 months and 5 days.

"Thou shalt surely die." The angel of death has been busy striking down many dear and loved objects, filling the world with sadness and despair, and desolating many a once happy family; and the stern messenger has again called upon our church for a victim, removing from our midst an aged and worthy member, reminding us that the pale King has come nearer us, and making us painfully sensible that in the midst of life we are in death. Mother Webbert has gone to reap the rich harvest of a well spent life: She has gone to receive a crown of never fading and everlasting glory; she has gone to receive her plaudit from a just God, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The deceased professed faith in her loving Savior about thirty years ago, when Jesus spoke peace to her soul, giving assurance that she had passed from death unto life, and she died in the hope of a happy resurrection, and live forever at God's right hand. During her short illness, before she breathed her last, in conversation with her oldest daughter who waited on her with unremitting kindness through her illness, in meditation of her future and the kindness she had received was made to exclaim, "I wish to meet her in heaven!" She leaves an aged husband and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her loss. Funeral by brother Moses Miller and A. Beelman.

At their residence, two miles northeast of Lewisburg, Wayne county, Iowa, November 2d, sister Catharine R. Downs, wife of brother Joseph downs, aged 38 years 8 months, less one day. Disease, neuralgia and paralysis. Her maiden name was Black; birthplace. Pennsylvania. Funeral services at Lewisburg, November 31, by the writer, assisted by brother S. Riddle and Wm. J. Stout. Text, Heb. 13: 14. Our beloved sister was taken from our midst very suddenly, although in rather delicate health for some time. For several weeks she seemed better; and on the first of the month, (Saturday,) she was busied in making arrangements to attend our meeting on the 2nd, some 5 or 6 miles from their home. She even sat up sewing until 11 o'clock at night, when she retired. She awoke at 4 o'clock in the morning, complaining of headache, and ere two hours elapsed, she passed away—"slept the sleep that knows no waking," until the resurrection morn. Oh, solemn warning! You who read these lines reflect. "Here we have no continuing city;" hence let us "seek one to come." Our sister leaves a sorrowing husband, and two children to mourn her sudden departure.

LEWIS M. KOB.

Near North English, Iowa county, Iowa, Oct. 30th. Mary Annie, only child of brother Abraham and sister Susan Flory; aged 2 years 3 months and 6 days. Disease, croup. Thus has another plant been removed from the family nursery, to the fair climes of heaven, another angel added to the happy throng, another glorified spirit joined to the celestial choir. Cease to mourn ye disconsolate ones. Let the sweet melody vibrate into your drooping souls; look up and hopely follow on, and ere long we shall meet on that beautiful shore in the sweet by-and-by.

B. F. FLORY.

October 4th, 1873, at the house of brother Jacob Yoder, Maiden Creek congregation, Berks county, Pa., of cholera morbus, Elder David Eshelman, aged 75 years 3 months and 12 days. Thus of the same disease, in three months time, passed away three elders and housekeepers of three adjoining congregations; namely, John Zug, of Tulpehocken, David Merkey, of Little Swatara, and David Eshelman, of Maiden Creek.

C. BUCHER.

In the Carroll church, Carroll county, Ills., Oct. 15th, brother Thomas Gotobed, in the 90th year of his age. Our old brother was a church charge for a number of years, and grew very infirm; often expressing his desire to depart and be at rest. Finally tired nature gave way and he calmly expired in hope of a blisful immortallity. Funeral services from John 5: 25—28.

J. J. EMMERT.

LIST OF MONEYS RECEIVED for SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS, etc.,

D Hildebrand	$3 00	A W Livingstone	1 50
Jacob Deardorff	30	M Beeghly, per J H
Isaac Deardorff	3 00	Miller	1 08
Tobias Cober	50	L A Engle	50
Geo. S Wine	35	S A Garber	6 15
John W Geiger	1 25	Daniel Wolf Jun	4 00

WE will admit a limited number of selete advertisements at the following rates
One insertion, 20 cents a line.
Each subsequent insertion 15 cents a line.
Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.
No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations.

LOOK! LOOK!! LOOK!!!

and read it all. Old and New Books, twelve in number: The World of Wonders, Science and the Bible, Bunyan's Complete Works. Family Bible, &c., all of which are sold by subscription only, and will be delivered monthly. Sole agent for Somerset county,
46—2t. T. J. PRETTYMAN.

TRAPERS, &c.

How to trap, and fish, and tan furs. All for 50 cents. Address
WILLIAM DAILY.
Nimissilla,
9: 41—50. Summit Co., Ohio.

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS.

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.
EDW'D J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen,
YORK, PA.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passengers Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:
MT. DALLAS ACCOM., at 7: 50 A. M.
HUNTINGDON EXPRESS, at 2: 55 P. M.
RETURNING.
EXPRESS, leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.
ACCOMMODATION, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. In time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c.
W. H. BROWN, Supt.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE
By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.
This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works. "NIGHT SCENES," and "OUR FATHER'S HOUSE," nearly 100,000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. Z EGLEN & M'CURDY, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE "SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS,

Manufactured by E. P. Needham & Son, 143, 145 & 147 East 13d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,
J H. MOORE,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2.50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARICE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-tf.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary Word-for-word English Translation. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. WILLIAM AIKMAN, D. D. $1.50.

Man, in Genesis and in Geology; or the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. WELLS. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporaneous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Aims and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By GEORGE COMBE. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structure and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid,	1.25
Per dozen " "	13 30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 60 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail & postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1 25 per copy, postpaid, or $10.00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$3.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	2.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25
32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION.	25
BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.	$1.70
Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Moomaw, prepaid,	.75
Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid,	.75
12 copies, by Express.	7.00
Pions Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid,	.45
Browns Pocket Concordance,	60
German & English Testaments,	.75
NEAD'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid,	1.45
" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid	1.40
COMPANION Volume 3, bound post paid,	$2.7
Reserved at the office,	2.25

HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $ 1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco. To ministers on Tobacco, Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63, Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interest.

228 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

DR. FAHRNEY'S

Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

A tonic and purge, for Blood Diseases. Great reputation. Many testimonials. Many ministering brethren use and recommend it. Ask or send for the "Health Messenger." Use only the "Panacea" prepared by

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,
431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

AND

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.
Waynesboro, Franklin Co, Pa.

☞ Agents Wanted Everywhere. ☜

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, NOV. 25, 1873. NUMBER 47.

Doctrinal Preaching.

The gospel cannot be preached without doctrinal statements. Sensible people do not expect it to be done. Hearts imbued with the spirit of Christ feast no the doctrine of Christ, and gather new strength for duty and trial as they treasure the truth. But somehow or other an unaccountable prejudice has made headway in the Church against doctrinal preaching. It is, however, a mere prejudice, the offspring of thoughtlessness, and should not deter and minister from holding forth the Word of Life, as he understands it.

Rhetorical splurges on moral questions should not be allowed to take the place of bold, faithful descriptions of human guilt and danger; nor should scientific lectures displace the exposition of the sacred text. The age of "itching ears" has come. Young men and maidens frown the moment the preacher launches into theology. Their frown is sometimes potent. Its influence too often reaches the pulpit, and he whose face should be flint to defend the right, feels strange misgivings when vision of coming remonstrances flit before his imagination. It is laudable to wish to please. He who does not please, can scarcely hope to profit his hearers. Such reasoning leads to compromises,and these to further concessions, until the glow of manhood fades, and spiritual independence succumbs to the imperious mandates of worldly prudence. And then indeed is the pulpit muzzled. The preacher reflects the mind of the people. He fears to do otherwise. Unpalatable truths are shut out. The gospel is mutilated. Instead of the sincere "milk of the Word" to nourish babes, or the "strong meat" for those whose spiritual senses are exercised so as to need it, the juiceless husks of human learning, or the tinsel of rhetoric, or the flowers of a beautiful style, are dealt out to souls famishing for the bread of life. There is too much of this in the Church. It is laying waste the fairest fields of the Lord's heritage.

The Church needs doctrines. Without them she will perish, in spite of wealth and numbers and culture. We do not mean disputes and wrangling, but doctrines. What God says of man, of sin, of the devil, must be repeated and enforced. The office and mission of Christ must be explained and defended. The work of the Holy Ghost, as it relates to the penitent, the seekers, and the believer, must be kept before the mind. The dread realities of retribution in eternity must be held up for warning and reproof. Can he be faithful who speaks lightly of these things? Can the Church prosper where they are distasteful? Will not God hold both ministers and people to account if truth falls in the streets, because the flippant outcry against doctrinal preaching has been raised?—Western Christian Advocate.

Sense Sin.

It is highly important that every one should have a deep sense of sin, and a profound horror of it. Those who have but slight convictions, if those convictions bring them to the Savior, are safe; but such persons should pray the Lord to deepen in them their sense of the evil of sin. Slight thoughts of sin lead to slight thoughts of grace, and what can be worse? Nothing is more to be dreaded than a flimsy religion, frail as a spider's web, unsubstantial as the air. Lord, give me deep repentance. Teach me to know my sin, and all the evils which lurk in it; make me to shudder at it,and dread it as a burnt child dreads the fire. Thank God, if you have been laid low under the law. Bless God, for deep subsoil ploughing and trenching. I desire to feel, every day, that sin is an exceedingly bitter thing, a deadly evil, a moral poison, the essence of hell. Oh! to loathe iniquity, and see with a self-abhorrence its heinous character; for so shall we prize the salvation of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love which thought it, the blood which bought it, and the grace which wrought it out! —Spurgeon.

CLEANLINESS is next to godliness.

From the Index and Baptist.

Will It Pay?

Will it pay? That's the question now-a-days. Whatever may be the enterprise proposed, or the engagement contemplated, the question immediately arises, will it pay? is anything to be made by it? This is well; for if nothing is to be gained, why should one undergo all the labor and worry consequent upon it?

With all due reverence, let us apply the question to the service of God. Will it pay? will it pay temporally? for that brings the question home to every one. The testimony of the Psalmist—"I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread"—is enough to settle the question in the affirmative; but to this may be added the accumulated testimony of Christians through all succeeding ages. The man whose daily life is a faithful exponent of the grace of God within his heart, who, in all his dealings, bears witness that he has "been with Jesus," has the confidence of all with whom he has any transactions. To such a one, profitable employment is always open. He can be trusted, and the world will, as opportunity occurs, show a just appreciation of such a character. For a position requiring more than ordinary trust he is selected, provided he has the capacity to discharge the duties. If he is qualified for nothing more than the merest drudgery of labor, he still has the entire confidence of the community in which he lives; his word is relied upon; his faithfulness secures to him, before all others, the employment for which he is qualified. He is preferred, even by those who, seemingly, make light of the religion he professes. If he is a trader, this confidence, based upon his Christian life, brings him custom; if a professional man, it brings him practice; if engaged in any of the literary pursuits, it brings patronage; for mankind prefer to deal with those whom they can trust, and this dealing brings profit. Thus it pays—pays in dollars and cents.

Unseen dangers surround the path of every one in this life; "snares" and "gins" and "pitfalls" are all about our steps; "the pestilence walketh in darkness" and "destruction wasteth at noonday," yet a consciousness of the grace of God in the heart, give to the servant of God a feeling of security amid those dangers possessed by no other individuals. His Father holds all things in his hand, and makes all things work together for good to those that love him; and who will not say that it is not pay, rich pay, to feel safe, let what will betide?

The service of God brings with it a clear conscience: the man can look his fellow man honestly and full in the face; no need of dodging around corners, to avoid one whom he has injured; no need of conniving at the wickedness of the world, or of professed Christians, lest some secret misdemeanor of his own shall be revealed. He is a free man. Conscious of his own integrity and rectitude, he fears the malice and envy of none. This brings peace, and quite, and independance of character. Thus it pays.

This inward consciousness of rectitude, of the faithful discharge of his duties to his Maker and his fellow man, lightens the daily toil of the servant of God, sweetens his hours recreation and gives him sweet and refreshing sleep. All these things are conducive to health—one of the greatest temporal blessings—and this is pay; pay which it would be worth seeking, even if it were all.

Yes, the service of God does pay, in temporal matters, richly pays, to say naught of the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, and the hope that "entereth within the veil," a sure "anchor of the soul," without which hope and faith this life is a failure, and the next an unmitigated horror; to say naught of the rich reward which, in the bright region of eternal glory, awaits every true servant of God. "Godliness is profitable unto all things."

M. J. W.

The "Habit" of Drunkenness.

An old writer, Sir Walter Raleigh, who flourished in the sixteenth century, thus discourses, in pretty strong English, on the vice of intemperance:

"Take especial care that you delight not in wine, for there never was any man that came to honor or preferment that loved it, for it transfereth a man into a beast, decayeth health, poisoneth the breath, destroyeth natural heat, bringeth man's stomach to an artificial burning, deformeth the face, rotteth the teeth, and to conclude maketh a man contemptible, soon old and despised of all wise and worthy men; hated in thy servants, thyself and thy companions, for it is a bewitching and infectious vice; and remember my words, that it were better for a man to be subject to any vice than to it; for all other vanities and sins are recovered, but a drunkard will never shake off the delight of beastliness, for the longer it possesseth a man, the more he will delight in it, and the older he groweth the more he will be subject to it, for it dulleth the spirits and destroyeth the body, as ivy doth the old tree, or as the worm that engendereth in the kernel of the nut."

Strong terms certainly, offering very little hope. But the reader must give to all their words their full force. To "delight" in wine and to "love" it, meant a great deal when Sir Walter wrote, though by constant use, those words in our modern vocabulary have come to signify less. The man who "delights in wine—a generic term for strong liquor—as Sir Walter used the word, has become far gone in bad habits. They had terrible drinking bouts in those days. Again, "subject to any vice," as the knight understood it, meant irreclaimably gone. But the hope of modern reformers is that no man must confess himself "subject," or admit that he has no power of resistance. When once this concession is made; the victim yields weakly to despair of himself, then come in aptly the simile of the ivy on the tree and the worm in the kernel. Nobody need confess of himself that he cannot reform. So Sir Walter Raleigh must have thought, for he thus proceeds: "Take heed, therefore, that such a careless canker pass not thy youth, nor such a beastly infection thy old age; for then shall thy life be but as the life of a beast, and after thy death thou shalt leave a shameful infamy."—Union Free Press.

Jesus in the Valley.

There is one experience we must all pass through—death. The Bible describes it as a valley, "The valley of the shadow of death." And how apt that phrase is to picture forth the seeming darkness and loneliness of the dying hour. It is a natural description. Men assent to it everywhere. In reading Homer it is to be noticed how he speaks of death as going down into darkness. One after another his warriors tumble down into a dismal gloom.

We all need a companion for that walk through the valley, who shall it be? No human being can go with us. We watch our dear ones as they disappear down the accumulating shadows of the dying hour. We can't accompany them. We must let them go alone, the husband the wife, the mother her babe—too young a traveler for such a sad journey. One by one we disappear down the valley and are lost to view. It is here though that faith lifts up its cheerful voice, and how its echoes ring sweet and musical at the valley's mouth: "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. * * * Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staff comfort me." Jesus becomes our companion. We lean upon him. He leaves his footprints close by the side of ours.

A young man was dying in a strange city. His parents had come from their eastern home to watch over his last moments. He looked up and uttered these words, "Father, mother, Jesus? Father can't go with me: Jesus can go with me." Beautiful testimony to the faithful companionship of Christ in the dark valley.

It is marvelous what a victory over death Christ can give. He who "hath abolished death," abolishes it at times so completely that there seems to be no valley. The exit from this life is just a way of slanting up into unutterable glory.

A sister in Christ lay dying. Visions of heaven came to her. She was asked if she really thought she saw heaven. Her answer was, "I know I saw heaven;" and then came this remarkable testimony: but one I did n't see, the valley of the shadow of death. I saw the suburbs." She saw the suburbs of the celestial city, the outlying fields of green, the crystal water of life, and the bright, fadeless light. She saw no valley, no dark avenue of approach to the city. Jesus had taken all the darkness away,

Of this nature was the testimony of a dying minister. He sent this message to those whom he had tryed to comfort in the midst of their fears concereing death: "Tell them it is just as I said it would be. There is no valley," emphatically repeating, "oh, no valley. It is all clear and bright, a king's highway."

The light of an everlasting life seems to dawn upon the heads of such, and touched with his glory they go already crowned into the New Jerusalem.

Who would not have Jesus for a companion in the dying hour so flooding the way out of life with his own glory that we can cry, "There is no valley."—American Messenger.

For the Companion.

Christian Salutation. C. M.

The following hymn is suited to love-feast occasions and is intended to be sung while the Christian salutation is passing around.

"Greet ye one another with a kiss of love." 1 Peter 5: 14.

"Go, teach them to observe all things
Whatever I command;
And teach them that obedience brings
Grace on the Christian band."

Who can believe that Peter taught
What Christ did not command—
That Paul enjoined a kiss for naught,
Or meant to kiss by hand?

Come let us then our pledge renew,—
A pledge sent from above,—
Of fellowship and friendship true,
By hand and kiss of love.

Lord, let the sacred token go
Upon its hallowed trust.
Oh, God, defend from malice low—
From hate's polluting rust.

Then firm, united, let us stand;
Our glory be in this:
We're not ashamed of God's command—
We greet with holy kiss.

We bind each other by this act,
Faithful to members true,—
To brother sister, all compact,—
Till death will all undo.

Angelic hosts shall meet us there,
With fond embrace to greet;
In happy union ev'rywhere—
In love and joy complete.

Oh then we'll sing redeeming bliss,
When all our members rise;
The Savior then will greet with kiss,
His saints amid the skies.

P. H. Beaver.

Montandon, Pa.

For the Companion.

Light Giving.

"Ye are the light of the world." This expression of our Lord, doubtless referred principally to what the apostles were to be, as in the case of Pentecost. "Let your light so shine before men, that they seeing your good works, may glorify your Father which is in heaven." The light here spoken of is, unmistakably, Christianity; hence the text must be equally applicable to all true Christian people. The metaphor also implies activity and the occupation of favorable or suitable positions; that the world may receive the benefit emanating from a true Christian character. He is to show kindness anp friendship, and in this way stimulate the fallen. And in order to reach the masses, the Christian must come down into the path of humility and stoop to lift the degraded, irrespective of wealth, dress or position.

One of the the fundamental principles of true Christianity is, to live for others, as well as for one's self.

That which a man has he has not for himself alone but for his fellow-men as well.

Nature is the greatest and most liberal of all givers. The rain, the air, the sun, all shed abroad and genial influence. So the gospel of Christ, in itself and in the lives of its professors is designed to shed abroad, an influence for good. It is light for fallen humanity. Let it shine, uninterrupted, in all its splendor, for millions are in darkness.

Light is a symbol of goodness. Its great property is to shine—a giving forth. Goodness comes from God. It is an attribute of Deity. There is a natural goodness in the hearts of many unconverted men; it is, however, not of that quality to change that which is corrupt in the world.

As men cannot kindle lights which will take the place of the sun, so the natural goodness of men can never overcome the darkness that is in the world by reason of sin. But how are Christian people to fulfil these precepts? They must have the power or the capacity for the power, else why the injunction of the text? Hence the moral obligation binding upon all, to develop the mind, to draw out and set into use its latent capabilities that it may best and most powerfully subserve the purpose of radiating that blessed halo of heavenly light.

There are many other ways by which the light of redeeming power may be disseminated. The gift of speech is a wonderful endowment and should be cultivated in the interests of religion. Its possessor should protest against sin, admonish the careless, and kindly encourage the weak and discouraged. Benevolence can be made a very effective medium for the accomplishment of good.

There are some persons, it is true, who aim to do much along this line of goodness; but, from a misunderstanding of the divine monition, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth," they paralyze the noble influence of a generous and liberal act. False prudence; for when you do anything for God, something to his honor and glory, let the world know this, that they may do likewise, and thus serve the purpose for which we were created.

A Christian life is a powerful agency for disseminating the light of the gospel. Another very happy agent is active—Christian bravery—upon certain occasions. But alas! how often is this pure and holy light obscured by the evil in the heart, in entertaining a spirit of malignancy; and by indulging a spirit of sloth, and neglecting to improve, both morally and intellectually under the blessed advantages of so many unmerited favors of heaven, continually bestowed upon us; and by an improper admiration for the things of this world. Oh! how earnestly in view of the uncertainty of life; the extreme brevity of earthly time, at most, in comparison with eternity, should all Christians endeavor to let their lights shine as true followers of Christ; reflecting his life and light, as the moon reflects the glowing light of the burning sun.

J. C. Funderburgh.

Neglect of Small Virtues.

It has often been said that there are no great and small sins in the eyes of Jehovah. If this is true in one sense, it is equally true that there are no great and small virtues. That there is, however, a difference in the divine judgment in the degree of heinousness in different sins, or the meritoriousness of different virtuous acts, cannot be questioned. Otherwise, or viewed in the abstract, no sin is small, no virtue is insignificant; but comparatively, both virtues and sins are of greater and less magnitude. To have a proper conception, therefore, of sin, as well as of virtue, we need to see it clearly in its own light as it reveals itself to the divine mind. We need to stop looking at different sins in comparison with other sins, and to see each as an act of infinite demerit. So with the smaller virtues. They are also of great importance, and should never be regarded, more especially as a Christian, as worthy of any less than the most scrupulous cultivation.

It is especially in their relation to the general make up of a man's character that these smaller virtues are of vast account, and in their influence upon the man whereby his greater virtues are to be determined. Although rocks far exceed in bulk and weight and individual importance the grains of sand in which they may be imbeded, after all to the world as a whole the grains of sand are of much more consequence. And in building up the superstructure of a Christian character upon the divine and divinely laid foundation, this great truth is only overlooked to one's peril, perhaps final ruin. The fact is not properly weighed, that it is to this fatal error that thousands can justly attribute their shipwreck. The reason is that men have fallen into the delusion of imagining that there is but little harm and little danger in the occasional neglect of small virtues or the slight indulgence of some small sins. There is perhaps no delusion whatever, of any serious moment, into which young Christians are so liable to fall as this.

The evils of the neglect of small virtues through this delusion can in part b seen by careful meditation on the following points:

1. It tends directly to weaken the purpose to resist the temptations which lead to sin. The experiments can readily be tried in other respects. Indeed most men have personal experience on this point. They know how a resolution to practice some virtue is undermined by slight indulgences. It is like the wearing of a channel over the embankment of a dam. Grain by grain is washed away, until finally no power can keep back the on-rushing current. Thus the whole of the fortifications of a man against sin have often been carried piece meal. For we can always rest assured that he who gives way in reference to small virtues is thereby rendered more vulnerable to the assaults of temptation with reference to the greater virtues. Says the Savior, "He that is faithful in that which is least, is also faithful in much."

2. A neglect to cultivate the small virtues not only renders us more liable to the temptation to neglect the greater, but it also deadens the conscience, and renders it less susceptible to good impressions. Conscience is, in an important aspect, the sense of obligation to do that which is virtuous, to practice whatever virtue is known to us. Hence, whenever we neglect to practice a given virtue, however small it may be, the renewed conscience, being extremely sensitive, remonstrates strongly and urges us on to the performance of duty. But if one small virtue after another is repeatedly neglected and the voice of conscience is unheeded, it will become not only so weakened as not to remonstrate in the instances of repeated neglect, but even in reference to other duties and the practice of other virtues its influence is not so potent, nor its authority so commanding. It is hence that we are especially cautioned by the voice of inspiration to keep a conscience void of offense toward God and man.

3. There is a still further evil similar to the preceding ones, which grows out of the neglect of small virtues. We refer to the natural growth of evil propensities and appetites. An attempt to cultivate only the more important and prominent virtues, and thus neglecting the smaller, is but another way of cultivating small vices and indulging in small sins. These small indulgences, as experience universally proves, strengthen the propensities and appetites for evil. It is as if one should plant a garden with a few choice fruit trees, and expecting the shadow thereof to keep down the weeds, while the owner not simply gathers the fruit from the planted trees, but all the reward of the faithful cultivation of his garden. Weeds will grow unless the ground is pre-occupied with other vegetation, and, in addition, positive efforts are made to keep them down. Even so sin is indigenous to the human heart. Constant cultivation of the virtues is necessary to keep the vices down. Even with all our efforts to mortify the deeds of the body, the "motions of sin in the flesh" are still felt. Much more is this so when we neglect the smaller virtues, for that in itself is a vice. We cannot therefore, on these accounts, afford to neglect so important a duty as the careful practice of all the virtues of the Christian life, whether we regard them as relatively great or small.

4. Once more it is to be observed that virtues like sins have certain connections between them, so that in many instances, as one sin draws others after it, so the neglect of one virtue tends to the neglect of others. In reference to this connection, so far as sins are concerned, there can be no doubt. It is a fact which may be observed almost every day, The steps which have led many men to ruin have their connections so clearly established that it ceases to be a wonder that the man who takes the first continues downward to the terrible end. So, no doubt, is it to some extent in the neglect to cultivate the smaller virtues. One little delinquency leads to another. One virtue so depends upon another that when it falls the other falls also. And so strikingly true is it that thus men are ruined, lost, that it is universally remarked that the downward road is entered by the neglect of small virtues and the commission of small vices. Guard well then, the beginnings of evil.—Church Advocate.

Christian and Savage Warfare.

We often justify, or at least greatly palliate, in our own estimation, the evils that may belong to, or grow out of, some course of life which we follow, by instituting a comparison between ourselves and others who may be engaged in the very same or like evil pursuit; as well as by making many distinctions in favor of our own course, when, in fact, such distinctions have no existence in the nature of the case. It is truly remarkable to what an extent men, and Christian men too, will tax their ingenuity in making out a self-satisfactory plea for self-justification at the bar of conscience and of public sentiment.

In my boyhood days I used to hear so much said, and read so much about the wicked depredations of the Indian tribes, and of their barbarous and cruel weapons of warfare, the tomahawk and scalping-knife, that my mind was perfectly horrified whenever I thought of these heathen tribes and their most inhuman modes of warfare. But such sentiments as I then entertained on this subject were purely the result of the very defective system of Christian morals which were in popular favor at that time, and which have not yet gone entirely into disuse. I say defective system of Christian morals, for I am persuaded that at that very time the poor, benighted Indians, without the Bible, were so much "a law unto themselves," that they reasoned more correctly, in many respects, upon this subject, than a professedly Christian people who were in possession of that true standard of morality which God gave to man to guide him in all his intercourse with his fellow man.

People generally, in writing and speaking on this subject, were then as they are still, accustomed to draw such comparisons and make such distinctions between themselves and savage Indians, and the modes of warfare employed on both sides, as made it quite clear that the reasons for our hostile operations against them were almost equal to a Divine warrant; and that our mode of killing them was quite a cultivated, reasonable and Christian mode of taking human life, while they had no justifiable cause of war at any time, and their mode of killing white people was altogether worthy of condemnation, because not practiced by any civilized or Christian nations.

My own mind was long since disabused of such prejudicial and unjust views of our relation to the Indian tribes, and to the unnecessary difficulties which have often existed between us and them. I say unnecessary, because I believe that if we, as a civilized and professedly Christian people, had profited as we ought to have done by the teachings of the pure and peaceful gospel of the Son of God, and we had been influenced in all our concerns with the natives by such teachings, very few of those bloody scenes which are on record in the history of our country would ever have had an existence. Usually, if not always, we have been the aggressive party, and those depredations which the different Indian tribes have from time to time committed upon the lives and property of our frontier settlements were but the legitimate effect of wrongs first committed by ourselves.

And what superiority can we rightfully claim over the poor, ignorant Indians as it regards the mode of warfare? Certainly we are prepared to do the work of death much more scientifically; but do we kill them any more Christian-like than they kill us? How much more humane and praiseworthy is it to shoot a man with a rifle, or plunge a bayonet through him, or to tear him literally to pieces with a shell, than to pierce his heart with an arrow, or to cut him down with an Indian hatchet, or even burn him at the stake? Indeed, to burn a man to death is not so cruel (because his sufferings are comparatively short) as tearing him to pieces, beyond the possibility of recovery, and yet leave him to linger and suffer for days and even weeks, before the work of death is finished?

I have witnessed several hard fought battles, such as Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga and Mission Ridge; been on these fields after the battles were over, and have seen many hundreds of human bodies prostrate upon the earth and cold in death; and then, afterward, I have been in field hospitals, filled with hundreds of wounded soldiers, many of whom were carried from the field but to languish and suffer and die. And yet in all this I saw nothing but the legitimate results of war, conducted in an intelligent, humane and scientific manner, and by a civilized and Christian people. No savage barbarity in all this! No Indian tomahawk or scalping-knife was to be found there, yet there was the evidence that more cruel and destructive implements of death had done their work there, for in many places the earth was strewn with fragments of human skulls and scalps and brains!

But why should we make comparisons between one mode of war and another? We surely do not expect to find one that is not barbarous, inhuman and cruel, for such a thing does not, cannot exist. War, no matter how or by whom practiced, is essentially bad; its prime elements are barbarity, inhumanity and cruelty; it is a wicked thing, and you cannot make it otherwise than wicked; you may give it a Christian baptism and sustain it in practice under the Christian name, as has been done for many centuries past, but you cannot regenerate and make a good thing of it; it remains a work of the devil, which our Lord tells us he came on earth to destroy.

O, when will nations learn the ways of peace,
That human butchery on earth may cease;
And Christian principles and love efface
The last foul stain of war upon our race,
When all, as brothers of one family,
Shall, in this one resolve, at least, agree,
That as they are the workmanship of God,
They will not help to shed each other's blood,
But cultivate with all that "peace, good will,"
Which in abundance shall the nations fill,
When Christ, who, for our peace, on earth was slain,
In glory shall return to earth to reign.

—Christian Neighbor.

Leave Open the Gates You go Through.

A very sick man on being told by his physician, (after an earnest inquiry,) that he could not survive many days, said: —"Then I wish the companion of my days to go with me." His wife replied: —"Husband, I will come along very soon."

I can not go with you, my husband!
Not "over the river with you!"
I'll meet you as onward you journey,
Leave open the gates you go through!

Ah! we cannot travel together
On the road that leads us from life,
We go single file down the mountain,
Unminding the pathway of strife.

We go, as the spark in the embers,
Like them, we die one by one out,
Lo! the latest may "lock then the door,"
And follow their kindred without.

O! weep not thus, for I am coming!
Soon I'm coming to join my mate;
Ah! first I'll smooth your pillow—dying,
And then pass through the open gate!

Husband! I'll follow soon behind thee,
Linger not on the river to wait!
I'll join you in the great hereafter,
Leave open! wide open, the gate

The river that runs by the footpath,
We've travelled thus far in our life,
Has crossed the path we have trodden,
And passed between man and wife!

He left the gates open, I'll find him!
I'll not be behind him far;
The path that he took is well beaten,
And then, lo! the gates are ajar!

I'll follow the road that he travelled,
I'll notice his tracks on the shore,
I'll row the vessel he rowed there,
And lean, as he leaned, on the oar!

The oar is the arm of Almighty!
That stays when human strength gives way;
The anchor that holds the vessel strongly,
Lo when the vessel sways away.

Behold! my husband's gone before me!
The angels bid him—never wait;
Should I miss the soonest passage,
They'll find for me the open gate.

I need not go with you, my Husband!
Not "over the river" with you;
I'll meet you as onward you journey,
Leave open the gates you go through!

X. Y. Z.

For the COMPANION.

Avoidance—A Reply to Brother J. Garber.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." 1 Cor. 1: 10.

In my humble judgment the above scripture is applicable to us; because we do not all speak the same thing, &c. When we want the proper understanding of any scripture, we must consider what gave rise to it. If we understand this, and then make our explanations in harmony with it, they will be right and differences will cease.

In my former communication I requested to be corrected by the gospel, where wrong. Brother John tried to make some corrections, to which I feel it my duty to reply, in order that I may "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints." This was his motto. I hope, however, he will not be offended, if I, in love, call his attention to some misapplications of the scriptures.

With regard to the First Epistle to the Corinthians, he has failed to cite us to any more than we had, of a former one; and I had referred to the verses where Paul had written to that effect. And another evidence: The one I claim for the first is called "The First Epistle." Again, in the second epistle 2: 9 we read, "For this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things." Here I cannot find any complaint of disobedience to his first writings, but rather a commendation of obedience; while, according to brother G.'s idea, the first epistle was not heeded at all. How strange!

Brother G. says, we understand, "Not to eat a common meal with such." But the apostle does not say so. "We know that all disowned members are forbidden spiritual meals." I am glad that we all agree on this understanding, and speak the same thing. The question now arises, did Paul apply these scriptures to us? No. To whom then? To the Corinthians. Did they also know it? No, they did not; because they had him in full fellowship. Now let Paul make an application of the scripture in dispute, to them. "Let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." What kind of a meal does Paul mean—a common, or spiritual? I believe we all agree, a spiritual, therefore, most certainly, "with such an one, no, not to eat." "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." What does this mean? Why, if he is retained in the church, the whole body will become impure. What company will cause such an effect? The fornicators company in the church; therefore, "have no company with him"—"put away from among yourselves that wicked person." From among them where—from among them in common, social company? No; but from among the church, therefore church company. Now if Paul had written an epistle to the Corinthians before the one on record, and therein told them not to keep social company with the fornicator, they certainly would not have retained him in the church in full fellowship, that it would have been necessary for him again to tell them not to keep the feast with such; yet, according to brother G.'s idea, this must have been the case. But I say they were obedient to the first epistle; because in the second epistle, 2: 6–8, I understand, he tells them to take him in fellowship again. Hence I claim they were certainly obedient to the first epistle, and to a good effect.

For the sake of consistency, I would like to know how we are to admonish such as brethren, and feed them at our tables, if need be, and have no company with them. Brother G. has told us how to go about it; but, to follow his plan, we must receive them into our houses, to our tables, and admonish them, and do all this and have no company with them. Please reflect; this certainly would be having company with them to some extent.

I am requested to "show an instance where Christ ever ate with one that had made a covenant like you and I have with him, promised to live faithful unto him until death and then fall into such a gross sin." This requires the example, and I consider it unreasonable, or I might require you to show where he refused to do so. "We make a wide difference between a covenant-breaker and a negligent sinner; and a gross sinner even has more favor in the presence of the Lord than one of the above named characters." Then he quotes Paul to Heb. 6: 4-6, and 2 Peter 2: 20, 21, about the unpardonable sin. Paul did not say about the character under consideration, "It is impossible to renew him again to repentance," but, "Deliver him unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved." Most certainly repentance will destroy the works of the flesh; because in 2 Cor. 2: 7, we read, "Ye ought rather to forgive him and comfort him, lest such an one be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow."

He also quotes 2 Thess. 3: 6, "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the traditions which he has received of us." Then he says, "The apostle does not say in this verse, that we should disown him, but that we should keep away from such, lest we be defiled." Now if he did not mean that such are to be disowned, I know not what he did mean. The apostle said to us neither what brother G. says nor what he said to the Thessalonians; and what he said to them is not applicable to us, unless we have the same characters among us that they had among them. To more fully prove his position, he quotes 2 Thess. 3: 14, "And if any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed." Now let us look at this in the true light of the gospel. These scriptures are applicable to the characters that Paul wrote about; and, in examining the chapter, we find that there were some that would not work at all, &c. Now mark the 10th verse, "For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat." He says he had said this when he was with them; and in the first epistle, 4th chapter, 11th verse, he says, "And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you." Thus you see the first admonition was oral, the second, by writing the first, and the third by writing the second epistle to these characters. And in order to let the Thessalonians know what to do in a case where all the admonitions are not heeded, he says, "But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing. And if any man obey not our word by this epistle, (as the third admonition,) note that man," &c. Here I understand the apostle to disown such characters; and this is in full harmony with this advice, "He that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition reject."—"If he neglect to hear the church let him be unto the church as a heathen man and a publican." Now we have found the apostle to apply the words, Have no company with such that are fornicators, covetous, extortioners, idolaters, railers, drunkards, disorderly, busybodies, and those that would not work, and this came so near including all offences that would justify a church to disown members, that I cannot find room for any difference between the disowned, and therefore my convictions that the apostle means church company.

Brethren, I am not writing for the sake of controversy, or argument; but in honor to what I learn of Christ and his apostles, and this source, I think, is certainly old enough to be termed the "Ancient landmarks of the brethren." These are my honest convictions, that come so plainly to me when I awake from sweet sleep in the dead hour of night. This I think is earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. Oh! I wish we would all speak the same thing. I did not think that I was finding non-essentials in the holy law of God; but I always feel afraid to teach for doctrines the commandments of men. I hope no offence will be taken at what I have written, but ask again to be corrected by the gospel if wrong, because it is no benefit to be wrong, but it is of vital importance for us all to be right, that we may all act in harmony with the Gospel, according to our text, that we may be "perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment."

JACOB HOLSOPPLE.

Scalpleed, Pa.

Milton's Last Poem.

The following poem is from the Oxford edition of Milton's works:

I am old and blind!
Men point to me as smitten by God's frown,
Afflicted, and deserted by my mind;
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak; yet dying
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless, I more belong,
Father supreme, to Thee.

O Merciful one!
When men are farthest, then thou art near;
When men pass coldly by—my weakness shun,
Thy chariot I hear!

Thy glorious face
Is leaning towards me, and its holy light
Shines upon my lonely place,
And there is no more night!

On my bended knee
I recognize thy purpose clearly shown;
My vision thou hast dimmed, that I may see
Thyself—Thyself alone.

I have naught to fear,
This darkness is the shadow of Thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred; here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling where feet of mortal never yet have been,
Wrapped in the radiance of thy sinless hand
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go;
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
For Angel's lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing, now,
When heaven is opening on my sightless eyes—
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow—
That earth in darkness lies.

In a pure clime
My being fills with raptures; waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit; strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirring of a gift divine,
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine.

For the COMPANION.

Feet Washing.

We ought to wash each other's feet,
For Jesus tells us so;
And then we shall in glory meet,
He says to me and you.

The promise is to them that keep,
And the commandments know,
For they shall be the Savior's sheep
That at his bidding go.

Then let us manifest our love
And practically show,
The love we have for Christ above
And Christians here below.

And let us our dear Lord obey,
And to Mount Zion go,
Then we can sing, "Happy are they
Who the commandments do."

Lord, we will thy commandments keep,
As thou hast taught us to,
And humbly wash thy people's feet,
As thou thyself dids't do.

J. M. CASSEL.

Philadelphia, Pa.

The Infidel's Sheep.

Away among the hills of Northern New England were two infidel neighbors, who had lived to man's estate sinning and blaspheming against God.

One of them heard the gospel message, and hearing, believed unto eternal life. A short time afterward, the converted man went to the house of his infidel neighbor, and said to him:

"I have come to talk with you. I have been converted."

"Yes, I heard that you had been down there and gone forward for prayer," said the sceptic with a sneer; "and I was surprised, for I had thought you were about as sensible a man as there was in town."

"Well," said the Christian, "I have got a duty to do to you, and I want you to stop talking and hear me. I havn't slept much for two nights for thinking of it. I have got four sheep in my flock that belong to you. They came into my field six years ago, and I knew they had your mark on them, but I took them and marked them with my mark; and you inquired all around and could not hear anything of them. But they are in my field, with the increase of them; and now I want to settle this matter. I have laid awake nights and groaned over it; and I have come to get rid of it. And now I am at your option. I will do just what you say. If it is a few years in State's Prison, I will suffer that. If it is money or property you want, say the word. I have a good farm and money at interest, and you can have all you ask. I want to settle this matter up and get rid of it."

The infidel was amazed. He began to tremble.

"If you have got them sheep you are welcome to them. I don't want nothing of you, if you will only go away; a man that will come to me as you have—something must have got hold of you that I don't understand. You may keep the sheep if you will only go away."

"No," said the Christian, "I must settle this matter up, and pay for the sheep; I shall not be satisfied without. And you must tell me how much."

"Well," said the skeptic, "if you must pay me, you may give me what the sheep were worth when they got into your field, and pay me six per cent. on the amount, and go off and let me alone."

The man counted out the value of the sheep and the interest on the amount and laid it down, and then doubled the dose, and laid as much more down beside it, and went his way, leaving a load on his neighbor's heart almost as heavy as that which he himself had borne.

The full results of that scene are only known to God. One thing is certain; the infidel was seen to frequent the house of prayer, and we may be sure that he afterwards believed that there was some power in the gospel, and that all Christians were not hypocrites,—The Christian.

Selected by MAGGIE MILLER.

The Master's Call.

"The Master is come and calleth for thee." John 11 : 28.

She to whom these words were addressed, was, at the time she received the summons, sitting in her sorrow, mourning over the heaviest loss of her life. Lazarus was in his grave, and Mary was desolate. She had not even the heart to go and meet the Lord as Martha had done; she could only sit in the house and weep. But Jesus loved her, and would not have her comfortless. He had come a long journey, with a great purpose on his mind, and He knew how soon Mary's tears and Martha's troubles were to be turned into praise and joy. But first He must comfort them; and His immortal words to Martha, and the tears He wept with Mury, have opened streams of comfort for the sorrowing sisters and brethren of our race, which shall never cease to flow till God wipes away all tears. "The Master is come." Mary had but one Master, and her whole love and service were devoted to Him. Happy those who in joy or in sorrow can say:

"Jesus my Lord! I know His name,
His name is all my boast."

The name of the Master was a talisman to arouse her at once from her weeping. "He whose I am, and whom I serve, shall not need call me twice." Sorrow cannot overmaster one whose Master is the Lord. It is a delightful thought to the Christian, that while he is a son, he is also a servant. He looks up to God with the filial love and confidence of a child, but he looks up, also, "as the eyes of servants look into the hand of their master," with a look in which love is combined with reverence, and godly fear with devotion and willing heart-service.

"The Master is come." Mourner, can you feel that One is your Master, even Christ? And can you, in your affliction, realize that not only sorrow has come, but that blessed are they that thus mourn, for they shall be comforted. The Master not only came, but He called for Mary. Sorrow individualizes God's dealings with us, and makes us feel that He knows us one by one, and calls us one by one. Many a heart that knew Him but afar off in the day of prosperity, has heard His voice and owned His call in time of trouble. When the voices of the world are hushed around us, then is the time for the still small voice to be heard. The Lord knows the number of stars; He calleth them all by name; and He knows His own people also, and calleth them also by name, in the secret of their hearts. Oh, bereaved one, listen to His voice when the yearning comes over you for "The touch of a vanished hand,

And the sound of a voice that is still."

The Master calls in various ways, and for various ends. Some He calls to repentance, others He awakens to a sense of the realities of life and death, heaven and hell. To some His voice is one of awful warning or faithful rebuke, and to others it is a call of grace and forgiveness. He called for Mary, however, in order to comfort her; and sweet indeed was the message that led her to find at His feet healing for all her wounds. There is no grief too deep for Him to fathom, no sorrow too great for Him to heal. "Come unto me," is the call by which he invites all the weary and heavy laden; and when He calls, it is to give them rest.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Nov. 25, 1873.

The Blunt Iron.

"If the iron be blunt, that he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength." Eccl. 10 : 10.

These words are used by Solomon in his observations upon many of the practices which he noticed around him, and there is an excellent moral in them. The practical truth suggested by the words of Solomon, is the following: The less facilities we have for accomplishing any work, the greater is the effort required to accomplish it. We are all more or less acquainted with the circumstance referred to by Solomon, and know where the iron is blunt or the tool dull, more strength is required to make it do execution. For example, if we have a dull axe in cutting wood, many more strokes are required, and of course more strength than if the axe is sharp.

We must sometimes work under great disadvantages, or with our iron very blunt; and then more strength must be applied or else the work will not be done.

We may apply the truth to the secular affairs of life. There are many persons placed in such destitute and unpropitious circumstances in life that nothing but the most extraordinary and persevering effort will give them a competency. But these will. Their iron is blunt indeed, and nothing but an extra amount of strength put forth will secure success. The history of our race furnishes us with many examples where men have had everything against them, their iron being very blunt, yet they have by dint of hard labor risen from poverty to affluence.

The truth will apply most justly to educational efforts. Thousands have been in circumstances most unfavorable to the obtaining of knowledge. Their education had been neglected in their youth, and they have grown up in ignorance. But something has wakened the dormant powers of their minds to the importance of knowledge, and though the best time in their life for improvement has passed away, and perhaps disease has laid its hand upon them, and their iron may be said to be blunt in whatsoever light you look at them, nevertheless, with the bluntest iron, they have reached a mediocrity in mental culture and some have even excelled. They have made up in application and effort, what was wanting in favorable opportunity and desirable facilities.

The practical truth we are noticing applies in all its fulness to Christian effort both in working out our own salvation and laboring to bring others to Christ. The prejudices of a false education, the power of evil habits, and the pernicious influence of their associations that many have to contend with, are formidable objects in their way, and render their conversion, and the formation of a holy character, exceedingly difficult, and their iron with propriety may be said to be blunt. Still there is no occasion for discouragement, much less of despair. If the matter is taken hold of earnestly, and the iron though blunt applied with energy, and there is a striving to enter in at the strait gate, and a struggling with the difficulties like Jacob wrestled with the angel, the opposing elements will yield, and the seeker will find the pardon and peace he needs, and "come off more than conqueror" in the painful conflict "through him that has loved us and has given himself for us." Poor soul, fear not, though thy iron is blunt, God knows how blunt it is, or what thy difficulties are, and he will help thee, if all that thou canst do is done.

And so in our efforts to reclaim sinners. We may labor under great disadvantages, and our iron may be blunt. The minister may have to work with a blunt iron. Like Moses, he may not be a man of fluent speech, or like Paul, his "bodily presence may be weak and his speech contemptible." But then when his iron is blunt, he must put forth more strength. He must make up in zeal, and untiring diligence and a godly life, for superior talents and learning. And by the grace of God he can do so. And many a man in the ministry with a blunt iron has been eminently useful. And so in all our positions in life. Let none stand back and fold their arms and do nothing because their iron is blunt, or the opportunities and facilities for Christian labor not all that they could desire. Let them take hold of the blunt iron with a determined will to labor, and with a holy strength derived from God, and success will crown their labors.

There are many idle souls outside of the vineyard of the Lord who are doing nothing for themselves or for any body else, simply because their advantages, opportunities, and facilities for holy work are not as good as those of some other people, or as good as they might wish to have them. This should not be. Good opportunities and facilities may be desirable in accomplishing our own work, especially if it is an important work, and if important issues are involved in its completion. But in the absence of good opportunities and facilities, and with a blunt iron, much may be done in doing work having a bearing upon our temporal and upon our spiritual welfare.

The case of blind Bartimeus is an example of success under dificulties. He lacked the sense of sight. He heard that Jesus was coming, but he could not see him. He began to call on Jesus for mercy. And we might suppose, did we not know the selfishness and inhumanity of man, that all around would have sympathized with the unfortunate man. But instead of this, "they charged him to hold his peace." His iron was blunt. But he put forth more strength, and "cried the more a great deal, Thou son of David, have mercy on me." His appeal to the mercy of Jesus was needful, and he received his sight and followed Jesus.

Reader, remember the iron that is blunt. And whenever your iron is blunt, or whenever you have work to do, or duty to perform under adverse circumstances, do not think it cannot be done because the facilities for doing it are not all that you could wish for. Seize the iron and put forth more strength, and with a firm reliance on God for his blessing, you cannot fail. J. Q.

The Brethren's Almanac for 1874 contains interesting Biographical sketches of Michael Pfautz, Jacob Sontag and Peter Keyser, Jun. These sketches alone are worth more than the cost of the Almanac.

Editorial Correspondence.

At 6: 20 p. m. on the 3rd, we took the cars on the Chicago, Burlington & Missouri River R. R., and on Tuesday, 4th, 10: 30 a. m. arrived safely at Omaha, Nebraska. We inquired for a first class hotel, expecting that would not be very good in this far western town. We were directed to the Grand Central, whither we made our way; but when we entered it, we found it considerably too "grand" for us, but did not feel willing to withdraw. So we took a room, and after dinner we interviewed the city. Business appeared to be very dull. The only parties that were doing anything were the railroad companies, and they were very throng.

Omaha is a city of about 25,000 inhabitants. It is situated on the western bank of the Missouri River, near the northern limits of the State of Nebraska. It has some very fine buildings, and several beautiful streets. Twenty years ago there was not a house here. We also walked to the bank of the river, thinking to gather pebbles, shells, and other trinkets for mementos, but could find absolutely nothing except mud. And the river itself is a stream of mud; not cloudy water, but thin mud. And so the "oldest inhabitant" says it has always been. The causes of this are thus given: The channel of the river runs through a flat bed of soft clay, from one-fourth of a mile to two miles in width. On both sides the banks are constantly crumbling in, widening the channel, and filling up the bottom, and changing the course of the river, thus constantly agitating or stirring up the muddy surfaces. We would not like to live by such a muddy water, as it appears to make all around it look gloomy.

Wednesday, 5th. Took the train at about 11 a. m. on the Burlington and Missouri River R. R. in Nebraska. This road runs southward along the river to Atlantic Junction; thence westward along the Platte River. Along the Platte we saw immense flocks of wild geese. It was quite a sight, indeed. The banks of the river were covered with these birds for many perches, and when the train would near them they would take to their wings, and form a cloud of fowls. Suppose they have taken their winter quarters here.

There are several promising places along the line of this road, along the Platte River. Among them are Louisville, South Bend and Ashland. The latter is a prosperous looking place. At Lincoln we took dinner, but had no time to interview the place. This is the State Capital, and it has some fine buildings; but we could not see why the capital should be located at this place. It has no natural advantages, at least to the casual observer; but we may have an opportunity to speak of it more advisedly.

Landed at Fairmont, Filmore county, at about six p. m., but found no one with conveyance. Put up at the Henry House. Mr. From and wife, from Centre county, Pa., who stopped off here, also lodged with us. As we were both Pennsylvania Dutchmen we would naturally make up. They are moving to York county, this State, which is north of Filmore county.

Thursday, 6th. Engaged a livery team to take us to our friend's about twenty-four miles South. This distance we made in a little over three hours, arriving at brother Simon Holsinger's soon after one o'clock. Found them all in good health.

Friday, 7th. Visited cousin Levi Holsinger's who lives about three-fourths of a mile southeast. Not finding him at home, I left my wife here and walked to Carlton, about four miles south. This is a station on the St. Joseph and Denver City R. R. There are three dwellings, a store, a blacksmith shop, Station house, meat market and billiard saloon here. We cannot think that the billiard saloon can pay very much at such a place, with not over a dozen houses within three miles around it. Hope it may not pay, but may be so deeply run into the ground that the town may not be cursed with another one for the next quarter of a century. Here we received and hastily glanced over No. 44 of the COMPANION. Glad to see its pages filled with live and interesting essays and correspondence. Fourty-four and six make fifty. So we have but six more numbers to complete volume nine, and until our relation to the paper, as editor and proprietor, shall expire. Already preparations should be made for the new volume, and inducements offered for new subscribers. But this matter properly belongs to the new management, and for that reason, brother Quinter was to take editorial charge of the paper about this time. Hope he may be even now filling our vacant chair. If not, we hope the friends of the COMPANION will begin at once to solicit subscribers, offering them the unexpired part of this volume free. Let all prejudice be thrown aside, and give brother Quinter every opportunity to make the paper better than it has ever been. We see that some are already wondering whether he will publish the Full Report of the proceedings of the Annual Meeting. Of course he will. He might as well throw the whole machine into the Casselman River, as to attempt to publish the COMPANION without giving that Report, or materially deviating from any of the leading characteristics of the paper. Beecher himself could not make the enterprise a success among us upon any other principles. Brother Q. will not, we are assured, make any unfavorable change, but our contributors and friends might do so, if they would allow their apprehensions to lead them to withdraw their support, in the way of contributing to its columns, and patronizing it. Let none of its friends forsake it from apprehension. Let the responsibility rest upon others, by rejecting them, if they will do so, of which we have no fears.

We returned to our cousins in time to sup with them. They were also in the enjoyment of good health. This was the first meal we ever took in a Nebraska sod-house, of which we have read much. Perhaps at some other time we may describe it more particularly.

In the evening we preached at the house of Simon Holsinger. Their house is small, 12x30, but you know many peaceable sheep can live in a small fold. It was jammed full of attentive listeners. This is, so far as known the first Brethren's meeting in Filmore county, Nebraska. Sunday forenoon and evening, it is appointed for us to preach at the same place. After that you will hear from us again.

H. R. Holsinger.

Carlton, Neb. }
November, 8. }

An Episode in the life of brother Harper, formerly an officer in the Rebel Army, found in the Brethren's Almanac, is very interesting.

The Christian Family Companion and Gospel Visitor.

It seems that some of our readers do not understand how the Companion and Visitor are to be consolidated, and in what form the paper is to be published; hence we deem it necessary to explain.

1. There will be but one paper, instead of the two.

2. The paper is to be called "Christian Family Companion and Gospel Visitor."

3. The paper is to be a weekly, and of the same size and form as the current volume of the Companion.

From the foregoing you will be enabled to see that the Gospel Visitor is to be merged into the C. F. C., and hence it will cease to be published as a distinct paper. The subscribers to the Visitor, whose time paid for is not expired, will receive the weekly in its place; and those who may have subscribed for both, if the time is not expired, will receive the paper until they have their equivalent.

By this merging of the Visitor into the C. F. C. it is hoped, to some extent, at least, to combine the talent that has heretofore been divided between the two papers; and if this very desirable end can be attained, there should be, at least, some improvement. With this aim before us we feel to ask all the friends of our former periodicals to continue their patronage.

We wish to urge it upon all our agents, everywhere, to make their best efforts to obtain all the subscribers, if possible, so as to send in their lists by the 20th of December. This would be a very great favor to us. We may explain more fully hereafter. J. W. B.

The list of Names and Addresses of Ministers, in the Brethren's Almanac for 1874, is the fullest ever published, also the most correct.

Devotional Chimes,

A Choice Collection of New and Standard Hymns and Tunes adapted to all occasions of Social Worship, Family Devotions add Congregational Singing. By Asa Hull.

The above unpretending title accompanies a very complete and convenient little book, made portable, light and compact, so as to be easily transported to Social or Neighborhood meetings.

There are more than a hundred of the best known psalm tunes properly classed according to metre, each tune being accompanied by one, two, or three hymns. Then there are about one hundred and twenty spiritual songs, including, of course, "Nearer my God," "Shining Shore," and all the other favorites. Altogether, on the 248 pages there are about the same number of tunes, and nearly 400 hymns, with which quantity "Devotional Chimes" is large enough for all practical purposes.

Oliver Ditson & Co.
277 Washington St., Boston.

If you wish to make interesting Christmas presents to your friends or neighbors, send 75 cents for a dozen of Brethren's Almanacs for 1874.

Thanksgiving.

Thursday, November 27th, has been fixed upon as the day for the National Thanksgiving of 1873. The President has issued his proclamation in due season; and we take it for granted that the Governors of States, following the modern usage in this respect, will accept that date and make it uniform throughout the Republic.

The following is the text of the proclamation:

"The approaching close of another year brings with it the occasion for renewed thanksgiving and acknowledgement to the Almighty Ruler of the universe for the unnumbered mercies which he has bestowed upon us. Abundant harvests have been among the rewards of industry. With local exceptions health has been among the blessings enjoyed. Tranquillity at home and peace with other nations has prevailed. Frugal industry is regaining its merited recognition and its merited reward. Gradually, but under the providence of God, surely, as we trust, the nation is recovering from the lingering results of a dreadful civil strife. For these and all other mercies vouchsafed, it becomes us, as a people, to return heartfelt and grateful acknowledgment; and with our thanksgiving for blessings we may unite in prayers for the cessation of local and temporary sufferings. I, therefore, recommend that on Thursday, November 27, the people meet in their respective places of worship to make their acknowledgments to Almigbty God for his bounties and his protection, and to offer to him prayers for their continuance.

"In witness whereof I have set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington this 14th day of October, 1873, and of the Independence of the United States the 97th. U. S. Grant.

By the President:

Hamilton Fish, Sec'y of State.

Brethren's Almanac, single copy, 10 cents; six for 40 cents; one dozen for 75 cents.

"The Brethren's Almanac is cheap at 10 cents."—Many.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Respect of Persons.

DEAR BROTHER HOLSINGER: After a long delay, and much thought upon the practice and arguments set up in some places in the South, by some of our dear old, and much beloved brethren, whom I visited in Franklin and Roanoke counties, Va., I concluded to indite a few thoughts for the perusal of your readers. I had several interesting conversations in reference to the alienation of feeling and consequent disrespect arising from the different colors of the skin, which our Creator in his wisdom has given to the different tribes of the great human family. That your readers may know why I write this little letter, I will just say, that I had some conversation with some of the professed members of the church of God, about the practice of violating or trampling under foot some of the plain commandments of God, and more particularly the command, "Greet all the brethren with a holy kiss."

Now my dear Virginia brethren, please to tell me through the COMPANION, or some other way, where you get the authority to set up a custom against that good and perfect law, and to say, "That custom is not practiced here, nor ever will be." I ask you my dear brother N. (your name is partly forgotten, but it is my dear old brother Abraham Eller's son-in-law that I am addressing,) do tell me, have you set up a law, according to the ancient custom of the Medes and Persians, that cannot be changed? God forbid that such should be the case. Remember Peter's declaration. When he came down from the housetop he said, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him;" Acts 10: 34, 35. "For the Lord your God is God of gods, and Lord of lords, a great God, a mighty, and a terrible, which regardeth not persons nor taketh reward;" Deut. 20: 17. "For there is no respect of persons with God;" Rom. 2: 11. "But of those who seemed to be somewhat, whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no man's person; for they who seemed to be somewhat, in conference added nothing to me;" Gal. 2: 6.

Now my dear brethren and friends, let us look well to what we profess; for we believe that God is true, and in him is no lie at all, then let us believe all that he has said through the prophets of old in regard to disbelief. "Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you from among your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which shall not hear the prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people;" Acts 3: 22, 23.

Now, my dear brethren and sisters, I sometimes think that you will be held accountable; for many a poor soul will be lost on account of your actions and preaching. Some of you will stand up and declare that God is no respecter of persons, "but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." I often have to wonder how the dear brethren can enjoy the association of Moses and the Lamb, whom they have not seen, if they slight their colored brethren whom they have seen, and cause them to doubt now. My dear friends, if I know myself at all, I verily believe that Moses and the Lamb both wore a dark skin; that is, if he did truly come as he was prophesied of; for Moses was a dark-skinned man, if we can believe Ex. 4: 6, 7. Please read these verses; and see what would be the condition of the prophet that was to come, who was to be like unto Moses. I believe, that, if I stand off from my brethren on account of their skin, and say by my actions that I will not submit to the letter and spirit of God's word, he will remove the token of his love from off my tent, as he did from the tent of Aaron and Miriam, when he derided Moses on account of his Ethiopian wife; Num. 12: 1, 10—16. So, now, my dear readers, let us lay down that spirit of unbelief that is afloat in the world and manifests itself by saying, that it is left to us to do as we see fit in regard to meeting a certain class of our brethren as we do our white brethren. I am awfully afraid that those who do such things can never meet Moses and the Lamb in peace. I will now conclude my remarks. Yours in the bonds of love.

S. S. MAARS.

HOLLING, KANSAS. }
October 7, 1873. }

Brother Henry:

By request of Mary Rothrock, widow of Abraham Rothrock, deceased, I will pen a few lines for the C. F. C. She has been in the East on a visit to her brothers, sisters and friends. She with Mrs. Hoover, brother A. Brennaman, brother Geo. Ruble, and myself and wife, took the six o'clock train, on the morning of the 30th of Sept., at McVeytown, Pa., and landed at Pittsburg about two o'clock p. m. Here we changed cars. We took the Pan Handle Road, and reached Columbus, Ohio, about midnight. Here we changed cars for Indianapolis, where we arrived about 11 o'clock a. m. of next day. Changed cars again for St. Louis, where we landed between nine and ten o'clock p. m. Took buss No. 1, crossed the river in a steam ferry, and took the train for Kansas City. We reached that point at 11 p. m. of Oct. 2nd. There we had to lie over till 5: 15, morning of the 3rd, when we took the train for Lawrence. We reached Lawrence about 7 o'clock in the evening. Took the street cars to South Lawrence. Had a good night's rest. Next morning our children met us and took us to their homes. We found them all well.

On Saturday, the 4th, we went to a communion meeting at brother Moses Flory's in the Washington Creek congregation. We had a very good meeting. One hundred and fifty-one members communed. We are enjoying ourselves very well so far. This is a very beautiful country; and I think, a very good place for new beginners to settle.

ABRAHAM MYERS.

The Abomination of Desolation—A Query Answered.

On page 620, present volume of C. F. C., we find the following queries:

"What is the abomination? who are the desolate? and where is it to stand where it ought not? Is it in the church of Christ, or is it among the popular Christianity?" As there has no answer appeared yet, I will try with as much brevity as possible, to explain, intending to prove to you that our Savior had reference altogether to the destruction of Jerusalem, the great metropolis of the Jewish nation. The prophet Daniel, while in captivity in Babylon, had visions and explanations of the dreadful calamity which was to come upon Jerusalem and the inhabitants thereof. These things our Savior understood, and knew what was awaiting that generation. "The men of Nineveh shall rise up in judgment against this generation and shall condemn it, because they repented at the preaching of Jonah, and, behold, a greater than Jonah is here." "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings and ye would not! Behold your house is left unto you desolate." That house which was to be a house of prayer for all nations, they had made a den of thieves. Again when he was come near the city, he beheld it, and wept over it, saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! But now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee: and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another: because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." His disciples admiring the temple and the buildings thereof, spake to Jesus of the buildings how they were adorned with goodly stones. And as he answered them, he said, "As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." And they asked him privately, saying, "Master, when shall these things be? and what sign will there be when these things shall come to pass?" And as the disciples of Jesus also expected the end of the world soon after the destruction of Jerusalem, they wanted to know what sign there should be of his coming and of the end of the world. It appears they believed in signs. Perhaps they expected to live till then, and to see those signs. Jesus, after telling them some things which should precede the overthrow of their city, told them plainly, "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth let him understand,) then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains." Matt. 24: 15. "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which be in Judea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them which are in the countries enter thereinto. For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled.—for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people." Luke 21: 20. War is an abomination that produces desolation. Whosoever has read the history of the destruction of Jerusalem, must admit that it was an abomination of desolation.

The prophet Daniel while in captivity in Babylon, had much concern about Jerusalem which at that time was desolate. But he understood by books whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that the Lord would accomplish seventy years in the desolation of Jerusalem. Seventy years it lay desolate during the captivity. But Daniel knew it should be rebuilt; and as he was praying for the restoration of their city, the angel Gabriel was caused to fly swiftly by him, and he touched him, and talked with him, and informed him of the final abomination of desolation. Read the ninth chapter of Daniel and compare. The twenty-sixth verse reads, "And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined."

The querist will therefore see that the abomination is not to stand in the church of Christ, nor among the popular Christianity. But it did stand in and around Jerusalem, where it ought not to have stood, because it was the holy city, and God had put his name there.

JAS. Y. HECKLER.

Harleysville, Pa.

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord: It is through the kind providence of God, that I am still spared and have the privilege of this good Sabbath morning to write a few lines for the COMPANION. I feel as though I ought to say something about the lovefeast in the Elklick branch, Somerset county, Pa., which closed two weeks ago, being on the 25th and 26th of Oct. There was a good turnout of brethren and sisters from adjoining counties. I do not know that I ever heard better preaching than we had on Sunday morning. There was a large crowd of spectators present; but I have nothing good to write about them, as they were very noisy during the time of meeting. The brethren and sisters seemed to be interested; but there always are some that go to such places for amusement. I hope the time will come when such will come out from the world and give God their hearts.

Let me say to all such: You may, before long, be laid upon the bed of death, and there is only one who can soften that bed, and make it a bed of peaceful rest and joyful hope. "Boast not thyself of to-morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." Death may come suddenly upon you, and in a moment dim your sparkling eye; change your healthful countenance, and chill your warm heart. O my friends, delay not to seek the Savior; delay not to pray for the pardon of your sins; for there is but a step between you and death. If you want to be happy, your soul must be washed in the blood of Jesus, which alone can cleanse you from guilt; and you must have the grace of Jesus, which alone can subdue the power of sin. Your time is short in this world, even at the longest; but it is as uncertain as it is short: you know not how soon you may be summoned away. Perhaps the messenger of death is on his way, and in a few days you may be numbered with the dead. Oh! if you are not prepared to meet your God, by being washed in the Savior's blood and clothed with his righteousness, how dangerous is your situation! How foolish to be trifling with your immortal soul! Pray to God, then, to give you a new heart, that you may delight to serve him on earth, and be made meet for "the inheritance of the saints in light."

I had the pleasure of meeting with many of you at the lovefeast. Sister Claar has our many thanks for her kindness shown us during our stay on Saturday night. I do hope the day is not far distant when we may meet in that beautiful world on high. I shall not soon forget the interesting sermons delivered by the brethren; I felt very much profited by them. On Sunday accompanied by brother and sister Dell, started home, Reached home in safety on Sunday evening, although very tired. I enjoyed the trip there; saw the place for the first time; met many dear brethren and sisters. Many thanks to them there, for their kindness. Very thankful that Providence kept us in safety during journey. Farewell.

L. A. ENGLE.

Duncansville, Pa.

Answers to Queries.

In C. F. C., present volume, page 702, appear two queries, propounded by brother N. C. Workman. The first is, "Why did Jesus curse the fig tree because it had no figs, when the time of figs had not yet come"? Mark 11: 12—15.

Observe, Jesus saw that the fig tree had leaves on it; and as the fig tree puts forth its figs first, then the leaves, it was altogether reasonable to expect figs also. And as for the expression, that the time of figs had not yet come, we understand that the time for gathering the figs had not yet come, so there is nothing mysterious in the account.

The second query is, the meaning of the 16th verse of the 20th chapter of Matthew—"So the last shall be first, and the first last, for many be called, but few chosen."

Read from the 19th chapter 27—30 verses, and it will be discovered what gave rise to all that Jesus said from the 1st to the 16th verse of the 20th chapter. Peter had couched in his question the enquiry, whether they, the disciples, would not receive high positions in his kingdom. Now Jesus to disabuse their minds of such an idea, proceeded to answer them by telling them that all they that had forsaken ALL—father, mother, lands and possessions—would receive an hundredfold in this world, and in the world to come life everlasting. "But," says he, "many that are last shall be first, and the first last." "For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a householder, who went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. And when he had agreed with them for a penny a day, he sent them into the vineyard." Now, observe, "he had agreed with them for a PENNY a day." He sent others in at the third hour; also at the 6th and 9th hours, and, last, at the 11th hour. And when even was come he said to his steward, "Call the laborers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first." Now in the receiving of the reward they were all made equal; but the first, or those who labored all day, expected to receive more. Mark this, they expected more. But the Lord said, "I will give to this last, as to thee," &c. Now Jesus said, "So the last shall be first, and the first last; for many be called but few chosen." What do we understand by the mode of illustration, in answer to the oft asked questions, such as, "Who shall be greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" and "What shall we have, therefore?" &c., but simply this, there is no first, and no last—all are equal; for many be called but few chosen: chosen to high positions. This is evidently the sense of the passage under consideration. Then away with the many ex positions of the parable of the householder, when our Lord had nothing else in view but to convince the disciples that in the world to come there were no high seats or low seats. "But he that overcometh shall sit with me in my throne, as I overcome and am set down with my father in his throne."

THOM. D. LYON.

GREELY, WELD CO., COLORADO. }
November 12th, 1873. }

DEAR COMPANION:

By request I will write you an outline of our trip to this territory. We left W. Va. on Monday, 20th of October. The morning was an unpleasant one, it being very snowy, and there about six inches of snow had fallen during the night. Arrived at Huntington, by rail, at 5: 50. The steamer "Exchange" was awaiting the arrival of the train. In a few moments we were floating down the beautiful Ohio; but owing to a very low stage of water, and the night being dark and stormy, the boat lay up, after running about 15 miles, until morning, when she again got under way; but her running was slow, so that we did not arrive at Cincinnati until next morning at one o'clock. On our arrival at the wharf, we met our cousin and brother Noah Flory, and brother Daniel Cline, of Rockingham county, Va., just on their return from Colorado and the West. Also met with brother J. K. Holesberry of Barber Co., W. Va., who accompanied us out here. Laid over at Cincinnati until 5: 50 in the evening, when we left by the Ohio and Mississippi R. R., and arrived at St. Louis next morning. In about an hour we left by the North Mo. R. R., and arrived at Omaha, Nebraska, next day about ten o'clock. We left Omaha at about one o'clock, and arrived at Cheyenne, Wyoming territory, next day about noon. At 2 p. m., we left on the Denver Pacific R. R. for this place, where we arrived just before sundown. In about one hour and a half we had a house rented, stove up, and were housekeeping. We all had good health during the journey; and brought along with us 1140 lbs. baggage. In every way we had a very successful trip.

Since we have been here, the weather has been delightful. So far, all are well pleased with Colorado. I was down on the South Platte a week ago. I was among the Buffaloes. They are very numerous down there. The first one I shot at, I killed; and I came home with a good supply of buffalo beef and antelope meat. Can get tons of wild meat on the Platte for one cent a pound. There are yet a good number of good claims to preempt or homestead on the South Platte, along the line of R. R., but they are being taken up very fast.

This town is a beautiful town of a little over three years of age; has about two thousand inhabitants, many large business houses, and shops of all kinds, except beer or liquor shops, which are entirely prohibited, and the consequence is, no sots, lazy loafers, or anything of the kind are seen here. There is but little profane language used here. Society is as "high up" as anywhere in the East. The free, public school-house cost near $30.000. From all appearances there is a bright future awaiting Colorado.

Truly yours,
J. S. FLORY.

One More Appeal to the Church.

When I say church, I mean the combined Brotherhood. I want you to bear in mind, that, in a former No. of C. F. C., we made a call for help. I cannot just now cite you to the No., but will cite you to No. 25, present volume, page 398, and you will see an acknowledgment of what was received on the call, which is $29.55. Now I do not feel like saying much more on this, as I think there has been enough said in former numbers; but merely to let you know how we are circumstanced. When we had our house built, we settled up, and found ourselves in debt and exhausted; but to keep up with our promises we borrowed the money, and paid up, but our house is not near finished. we expected help to pay the borrowed money back, when it came due, but in this we are disappointed. Now we have borrowed it again for three months. Now will not the dear brethren who are able, and have not helped us heretofore, come to our relief and help us out of our trouble. Bear in mind, if each brother that is well able, would send us one dollar; others that are not so able, 50 cents; and others 25 cents, some but 10 cents, would it not more than relieve us? Now who is the brother or sister that will bear to hear of a congregation being in difficulty for a good cause, when they could relieve them with 25 cents, and the giver surely has the promise on his side. Now the two dollars that are in the acknowledgement were sent from some dear, open hearted brother from Colorado. Now how many dear brethren, perhaps better off in this world's goods, live much nearer, have not responded? Brethren, I do hope that you will not shut up your bowels of compassion in a cause like this.

I might say much more, but I will forbear; believing that we all know our duty, and hoping that this is understood and will have its desired effect. Send your contribution to H. Spicher, Hillsdale, Indiana county, Pa., and I will report at the end of three months, through the C. F. C. Written by permission of the Montgomery congregation.

H. SPICHER.

NOTE:—We before spake a word in favor of the Montgomery brethren; but it seems that their call has met with no liberal response. Here is a chance of doing good, by giving a portion of our abundance to the Lord. The brethren were in need of a meeting-house, and we feel quite certain, that they would not call for aid if circumstances did not make it necessary. Will we hearken, or will we not? Will we give, or will we not? We can relieve them; we can gladden their hearts, and bring upon us, not only their blessing, but the approbation of God. If God should treat our prayers as we sometimes do the entreaties of the needy, would we not be poor and miserable creatures. How will we treat this call? The report at the end of the three months will tell. We purpose to make an effort to do something for them; and we shall do it cheerfully and earnestly. Let the same be done in other places, and especially in the various congregations of the Western District of Pennsylvania. J. W. B.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12, 1873.

DEAR COMPANION: Having just returned from a most delightful visit to the church at Philadelphia, I hasten to drop you a line, and thus give a public acknowledgment of the many kindnesses I experienced, and the true affection and genuine friendship which characterize the brethren there.

While sharing the hospitality of brother Spanogle and his very interesting family, I attended two meetings, a luxury I had not enjoyed since July last, when on a visit home, at the dear old church at Marsh Creek, around which cluster so many blessed associations of the past.

Brother Spanogle preached two very interesting and comprehensive sermons, on the Triumphant entrance of our blessed Savior into the city, when, as recorded in Matt. 21: 15, not only the multitude, but also the children joined in the acclamations of general joy, saying, "Hosanna to the Son of David!" "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord."

The subject was presented in a new light, exhibiting the better nature of these frequently denounced people, and at the same time showing the hypocrisy of the chief priests and scribes, and the illegal and wicked practice of those who were trafficking in the sacred offerings of the temple—wicked, although serving greatly to accommodate many who were obliged to travel long distances, and had no convenient means of carrying even a dove, one of the smallest offerings of sacrifice.

In the morning I visited the Sunday-school, which is under the very excellent supervision of brother J. S. Thomas. I was particularly pleased with the music, although the arrangement of the room, and the neat appearance of its inmates, alike deserve honorable mention.

While listening to my brother's discourse, my mind reverted, with some degree of self-condemnation, to the time when it was my privilege to attend the services of my brethren regularly; but occupying a position as this is, isolated from the church, I feel that I am sustaining a spiritual loss, perhaps, not justified even by the advantages which are here afforded.

I will take this means of saying to my brethren in Philadelphia, that, should a favorable business opportunity be presented, I am ready for an engagement. Till then, however, I shall not cease my labors in the "Church of the Strangers," which, in this great city, is a mission field sufficiently extensive for many laborers.

Yours &c., looking for His coming.

J. L. KITTINGER.
658 Broadway.

WE will admit a limited number of selete advertisements at the following rates
One insertion, 20 cents a line.
Each subsequent insertion 15 cents a line.
Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.
No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations

Undenominational but EVANGELICAL

International LESSONS! AGENTS WANTED. For samples, club rates, &c., address,

AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER. Fifth year. $1.50 per year. Single copy 15c.

BEST HELP for SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS and Officers published.

J.W. McIntyre, 4 South Fifth St. St. Louis.

LOOK! LOOK!! LOOK!!!

and read it all. Old and New Books, twelve in number: The World of Wonders, Science and the Bible, Bunyan's Complete Works, Family Bible, &c., all of which are sold by subscription only, and will be delivered monthly. Sole agent for Somerset county,
46—2t. T. J. PRETTYMAN.

TRAPPERS, &c.

How to trap, and fish, and tan furs. All for 50 cents. Address
WILLIAM DAILY.
Nimissilla,
9: 41—5t. Summit Co., Ohio.

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS.

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.
EDW'D J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen,
YORK, PA.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passengers Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:

MT. DALLAS ACCOM., at 7: 50 A. M.
HUNTINGDON EXPRESS, at 2: 55 P. M.

RETURNING.

EXPRESS, leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.

ACCOMMODATION, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. In time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c.

W. H. BROWN, SUPT.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE
By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.

This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works. "NIGHT SCENES," and "OUR FATHER'S HOUSE," nearly 100,000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. ZEIGLER & M'CURDY, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE
"SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS,

Manufactured by E. P. Needham & Son, 143, 145 & 147 East 13d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,
J. H. MOORE,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2.50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARICE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-tf.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary Word-for-word English Translation. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. WILLIAM AIKMAN, D. D. $1.50.

Man, In Genesis and In Geology; or the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. WELLS. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporaneous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Aims and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By GEORGE COMBE. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structure and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid,	1.25
Per dozen " "	13 30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 60 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1 25 per copy, postpaid, or $10.00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$2.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	2.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25
32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION.	25
BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.	$1.70
Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Mcomaw, prepaid,	.75
Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid,	.75
12 copies, by Express.	7.00
Pious Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid,	.45
Browns Pocket Concordance,	60
German & English Testaments,	.75
NEAD'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid,	1.45
" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid	1.40
COMPANION Volume 3, bound post paid,	$2.7
Reserved at the office,	2.25

HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $ 1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco-To ministers on Tobacco, Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63, Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interst.

208 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

DR. FAHRNEY'S

Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

A tonic and purge, for Blood Diseases. Great reputation. Many testimonials. Many ministering brethren use and recommend it. Ask or send for the "Health Messenger." Use only the "Panacea" prepared by

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,
431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

AND

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.
Waynesboro, Franklin Co. Pa.

☞ Agents Wanted Everywhere. ☜

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, DEC. 2, 1873. NUMBER 48.

Modern Egypt.

The land of the Khedive is likely soon to rival in greatness the ancient kingdom of the Pharaohs and the Ptolemies. Modern Egypt cannot, it is true, campare with ancient Egypt in the number of its inhabitants, for Diodorus tells us that the latter contained 30,000 towns and villages, while Herodotus says that in the reign of Amasis there were in Egypt 20,000 cities. What successive sovereigns, however, from Sesoscris to the caliphs failed to effect, or accomplished only in part, has been completely achieved under the rule of the Khedive by the opening of Suez Canal, while Alexandria and Cairo are fast becoming cities of palaces, and the wealth of the country is every day increasing.

Western prejudice attributes the present ignorance of the Musselman population of Turkey to Islamism, and concludes the the religion of Mohammed is a bar to all human progress. Any one, however, who visited Egypt ten years ago, and could now see the vast improvements that have been and are still being made by the Khedive, would at once have his prejudice very much modified, if not altogether removed. He would see the harbor of Alexandria, the finest, probably, in the world, crowded with the shipping of all nations, with a new break-water and new docks in course of complétion, warehouses filled with cotton, grain, and other agricultural produce ready for export, railways in operation or in course of construction—everywhere, in fact, the signs of increasing civilization and prosperity. He would see Alexandria itself more like a European than an Eastern city, with its magnificent buildings and its "Place des Consuls," that exceeds in size and beauty, any square to be found in Europe. He would see the land, irrigated by the Nile's overflow or by machinery, everywhere teeming with rich crops of wheat, maize, barley, beans and peas, clover and flax, rice, sugar-cane, tobacco, cotton, coffee, indigo and madder; the gardens producing apricots in May; peaches, plums, apples, pears and carobs in June; pomegranates, lemons and dates, in August; oranges in October, sweet lemons and bananas in November, and the mulberry and Seville oranges in January. In olden times, we know there was "corn in Egypt," now there is also "cotton in Egypt," and cotton, too, of the best description. Even six years ago there were not less than two hundred steam-ploughs at work in cotton cultivation. Every mechanical aid to production has, in fact, been made use of, and the result is an enormous increase of wealth both to the people and their ruler.

The romance of travel in Egypt is fast disappearing. A new bridge has been recently built by the Khedive over the Nile, so that travelers can now go direct in their carriages from their hotel to the pyramids without being obliged, as formerly, to cross the river in boats and finish the excursion on camels or donkeys. The old "dahabeah," or Nile boat, is giving way to the comparatively luxurious Nile steamer, and the charms of that dreamy epicurean life, floating up and down the great river, will soon become a memory of the past. No more encampments beneath the myriad star and the wondrous sky of an Egyptian night, amidst the labyrinth of pillars, obelisks and fallen temples of Luxor or Karnak. Instead of, as heretofore, passing the night on land under a tent, the traveler now sleeps in his comfortable berth on board the Khedive's steamer, and "does" the Nile in three weeks, instead of three months as in the palmy days of the dehabeahs. During the winter of 1871, before the steamers began to ply, the price asked for a first-class boat was from $450 to $600 a month for three or four months; while now, the voyage—585 miles—from Cairo to Philae, a few miles above the first cataract, and back again, can be made by the passenger steamers on the Nile belonging to the Khedive administration, at a cost of $520, including steamers, living, guides, and all other necessary expense.—N. J. Mechanic.

HEAR instruction, and be wise, and refuse it not.

The Last Great Change.

The picture which external sense delineates of the present state of man, is dark and gloomy. Contemplating the dark side of man's mortality, we may well mourn the fatal ravages that sin and death have made. "One generation passeth away and another cometh." Sin has erected a throne which reigns with universal sway over our fallen race. We have all seen neighbors and acquaintances laid in the dust; and the place that once knew them knows them no more. Many of us have consigned our best and dearest friends to the silent grave. No longer of this earth, where are they now? With pleasure mingled with distressing pain we call their image to remembrance; they shall not return to us, but in their condition we see what shall soon be our own. We, too, shall lie down with them in the cold and silent grave. In a few days our abode will be in the mansions of the tomb, no more to rise till the heavens be no more. This is the gloomy picture which nature and sense present to our view; but thanks be to God who by his word sheds a new and glorious light over the awful gloom, to Jesus who hath brought life and immortality to light by his gospel, what sense could not discover is clearly revealed to the eye of faith. The sunlight of revelation brightens the regions of the grave.

Here we see the Son of God triumphing over death, that his people might triumph and sing that joyful song: "O death where is thy sting? O, grave where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; the strength of sin is the law; but thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

For their sakes he visited the region of the grave and removed its terror, and shall they not love and rejoice in him? What though their bodies are soon to be laid and moulder in the dust? They shall rise again; they shall be raised in honor and glory when the heavens shall pass away and this earth shall be burnt up. When the sun and stars shall be lost in darkness then shall the righteous shine as the sun in the kingdom of their God forever and ever.

Surely with such bright and well-grounded hopes, the believer may well wait with patience all the days of his appointed time on earth, and be ready to welcome the messenger when he comes to call him home. In the exercise of faith and holy confidence he can contemplate his departure with a pleasing anticipation which the natural fear of death cannot overcome. He can welcome death as a sure release from all his pains and sorrows, and freely relinquish all its transitory and unsatisfying pleasures to enter into the mansions of eternal blessedness. It is a final farewell all to his doubts and fears and sorrows, and he can look death in the face with holy composure, for he sees him not as an enemy, but as a friend or messenger sent to call him home. He would die that he may live forever in the presence of his precious Savior, for with the eye of faith he has seen his salvation.

Does the laboring man see with pleasure the lengthing shadows of the setting sun that is to close his long day's toil? Does the slave hail with gratitude the hand that breaks his shackles? With far greater pleasure does the believer hail the long expected moment that is to give him freedom from the slavery of sin and every sorrow, and crown him with the unfaded wreaths of celestial honor and immortal purity.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in the heavens" for the children of God.

Thus the believer, with humility, with faith and patience, with hope and confidence, and in the diligent use of all the means of grace, and in the conscientious performance of all the duties of the Christian life waits all the days of his appointed time till his change comes. He is willing to stay and serve and suffer, if need be, as long as his Lord wills, but ready to depart and be with him, which he knows to be far better.

Endeavoring to obtain the sanctified use of every event in providence, and the divine blessing with every means of grace, he waits with patience and submission on the will of his God and Father, who shall soon call him home to an inheritance among all of them that are sanctified. Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of his faith, he runs with patience the race set before him, his great study being to be prepared for the last great change—for the awful, but pleasing scenes of the eternity he is rapidly approaching, so that, being found in Christ when the solemn messenger comes, he may with inexpressible transport adopt the language of the Apostle: "I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing." Surely in this light the great change, though solemn, is yet cheering, and much to be desired.—United Presbyterian.

For the COMPANION.

Admonitory.

While distressed in the spirit, on account of the state and condition of my people, for whose welfare my soul groaneth and would gladly suffer deprivations and labor, but not being able to come to any conclusion as to what I could do, personally, to avert an evil that seems to be threat'ning that beloved family, into which I was adopted nearly half a century ago, and with whom I often enjoyed a sweet foretaste of perfect peace; I say, while thus situated for weeks and months, pondering, I am at once aroused to action by the pen of the man in the Lord's crucible.—Balsbaugh.

His letter to brother D. P. Sayler, in C. F. C., No. 45, contains such awful truths, which ought to be seen and felt by every individual belonging to the same compact or family. Even from the days of the Savior on earth, there were sons of Zebedee, that would sit on the right hand and the left hand of the Master; and may I be permitted to say, thousands have lost their claim because of this vain strife for mastery. It would be far better to sit with Mary at the feet of Jesus, and look up to him, than to hustle and bustle to make people look on us. How many times have we seen a brother squirm and vince under conviction of wrong, until he had justified himself, at least, in his own estimation; whereas, the single phrase, "I am wrong," would have brought about much good to his own soul, and elevated him in the esteem of those concerned.

There is, and has been for many years, a strife in our fraternity; not exactly as to who shall be the greatest in the kingdom of heaven, but whose opinion or judgment, on some matters shall be equivalent to the word of God; and some have worked themselves up to such a pitch that they can hardly bear contradiction. Possessed of a fruitful mind, they can always argue themselves in the right (?). There are not a few of this description at present in our fraternity; and the worst of it is, they don't see themselves in that light, and if one would tell them in so many words, they would not believe it. The danger of disruption in the church, appears to me appalling, since the extreme pertinacity on the one side has called forth an equal obstinacy on the other, and that grand Christian virtue, forbearance, has clothed itself in bitter epithets and denunciation. No matter how wisely or cutely words are put together, if they are not produced by the spirit of love or congeniality, the spirit that produces them will crop out and it will be felt.

After brother B. had stated the condition of the church, on page 718, he says in the same paragraph, "How to grapple with these grave difficulties without augmenting the danger of faction, or rupturing the bonds of fraternal unity, is a matter of stupendnous consequence, and the great problem on the solution of which hangs the prosperity of Zion." A grave and important question, indeed; who is able, who is willing, to sally forth to meet Goliath? If the enemy is not vanquished, Zion will be overrun. No, no! that must not be; Zion shall stand though the heavens fall!

After brother B. has said, "Here is ample scope for the exercise of all the Christly properties, with which the church is endowed," he leads us into the grand secret, of the cure of the discase. The remedy is Love! And where is that love to be obtained? At no other place than at the foot of the cross. If we are in possession of that love, we will not frown at the young brother or sister, if they demand a reason for what we ask of them to submit to. We will not become impatient, if we don't gain on them in six months, or even years. Love will not resort to stern measures, only when forbearance and entreaties and tears no longer avail. And then love will display itself in the tone, gesture, and expression of its possessor, and will follow up the object to the silent chamber in the night.

O ye elders and shepherds of the flock! you and I are perhaps in the fault of our young members rebelling. How oft have we transgressed the counsels of the church, and yet we demand implicit obedience of others? Where is there an elder—where a minister that will venture "Not guilty"? It is my firm conviction, from information and observation, that too much magisterial dictation and arbitrary restrictions have caused disaffection, disloyalty and disruption. I know when this is read it will cause a frown upon me, and a thought that the old brother has lost his loyalty to the church; but if that were the case, you would not see anything from my pen except it would be railing; but God forbid that I should ever rail at the church, though ten thousand fall to my right and my left, I still would know no other foundation to stand on than where I am.

And now, you, my dear brethren and sisters, who may feel bitter against your elders, will you leave the church because some elder or elders have become too big in their own estimation? God forbid. Look closely at home and see whether the same spirit actuates you. You must learn to abase yourself, and ever suffer wrong. Remember the same faults you see in others, will possess you, by and by, if you but criticise and find fault. If you are truly in earnest to be saved, you will also learn to abstain from things that would be lawful in your estimation, for the sake of your brother. That great characteristic of the disciple of Jesus—love—makes you willing to bear all things in the blessed hope of immortality. I can close with no better sentence than that of the struggling sufferer, "Oh that we all were more completely under the omnipotent sway of divine love! Oh that we knew more of the blessedness of self-denial and self-sacrifice in a conscious coalescence with Jesus in the triumph of his cross. Oh that every heart string was quivering in sympathy with Christ in all the high and glorious ends of his crucifixion! Then would his love submerge every soul in its crystal depths, and the only rivalry would be who can crouch at the feet of Emmanuel, and exhibit most of his self forgetful, condescending spirit." AMEN. AMEN.

. P. LOEHR.

A Lepers' Village.

In William R Bliss's new book of travel in the Sandwich Islands, he describes as follows a "Lepers' Village."

"There is leprosy in the Hawaiian blood, but none of it is to be seen in Honolulu, as those who are afflicted with it are sent to the lepers' village, on the island of Molokai.

"To visit the settlement on Molokai, which is about thirty miles east of Honolulu, we embark on a clipper-schooner bound to windward to bring down a cargo of sugar from Lahaina—a town on the island of Maui, where lepers may be seen in its one broad street.

After rolling to starboard and rolling to larboard all night long, the schooner 'heaves to' at sunrise off the southern coast of the island, and we are set ashore from a small boat in the little harbor of Kaunakaki.

The island is green with vegetation, but is nearly deserted. There are less than fifteen hundred persons on it, although it contains one hundred and seventy square miles. As we ride on horseback away from the shore, up the ascending plains, in a northeastern direction, we pass deserted garden patches, fallen walls and ruins of native huts, on which knots of long grass are waving like signals of distress.

Crossing a succession of green hills, we come suddenly to the brink of the precipice Kalaupapa, which looks north to the ocean and is two thousand feet high. Below, from the foot of the precipice, stretches a plain, diversified with hills and vales, and reaching to the distant shore, where where it curves like a scythe into the sea, turning up a white swath against the trade wind. The plain is covered with luxuriant vegetation; but we can see no life on it. Here and there a few brown huts catch the eye. Far on the right are dots of white houses. That is the leper village. A steep bridle-path zigzags down the front of the precipice, and we must descend it. Under wreathing vines, white blossoms and swinging trailers, which adorn and obstruct the descent into this valley of death, the horses step carefully and tediously. In an hour they reach the plain, when a gallop of two miles brings us to the settlement. It consists of detached houses, enclosed by low walls or picket fences, standing in open pasture lands and sweet potato fields. Papara, puhala, banana trees and a winding brook give a picturesque appearance to the village. Its horizon is bounded on one side by the flower-covered precipice, which shuts off the world, and on the other side by the ocean.

"Every prospect pleases and only man is vile."

Every person in this community is a leper. Of those who have not sore hands or feet, the men till the ground and the women braid mats. Those who cannot take care of themselves are nursed in hospitals by leper nurses. The boys and girls go to school to leper teachers, learning the branches of a simple education which none of them will live long enough to appreciate. The leave the school with frolicsome shouts; they romp across the green fields, enjoying the air and sunshine like children in other lands, unconscious of their misfortune.

In a grassy field near the sea-shore stands a little church, visited all day by the sun and sea-breeze. Here a native minister, a leper, leads religious services on Sunday for his miserable fellows.

These poor people seem to be contented. A ration of five pounds of fresh meat and twenty pounds of vegetables is issued weekly, in addition to what each one cultivates with his own labor. This support is so much better than any Hawaiian ever has at home, that natives living on other parts of the island have desired to make themselves lepers in order to be taken care of in this little village of death. As we turn away for our homeward journey, it is natural to wish, for the sake of humanity, that there might be in this beautiful valley a river Jordan into which these miserable people could dip and be cleansed. But the curse of Elisha upon his corrupt servant seems to be irrevocably fixed upon them:

"The leprosy of Naaman shall cleave unto thee and unto thy seed forever."

The avaricious man is like the barren, sandy ground of a desert, which sucks in all the rain and dews with greediness, but yields no fruitful herbs or plants for the benefit of others.—Zion.

We often make life unhappy in wishing things to have turned otherwise than they do, merely because that is possible to the imagination which is impossible in fact.—Hazeled.

An Unexplained Phenomenon; Or the Darkness over New England in 1780.

Perhaps all of our readers have either heard or read of the Dark Day in 1780, and, no doubt, many have felt a desire to know more about it. Such will be interested in reading the following elaborate account of it, which we copy from the Advent Review, as it appeared in the Boston Journal in 1871.

"'Twas on a May day of the far old year
Seventeen hundred eighty that there fell
Over the bloom and sweet life of the spring,
Over the fresh earth and the heaven of noon,
A horror of great darkness like the night
In day of which the Norland sages tell—
The Twilight of the Gods. The low-hung sky
Was black with ominous clouds, save where its rim
Was fringed with a dull glow, like that which climbs
The crater's sides from the red hell below.
Birds ceased to sing, and all the barn-yard fowls
Roosted; the cattle at the pasture bars
Lowed, and looked homeward; bats on leathern wings
Flitted abroad; the sounds of labor died;
Men prayed, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom-blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky, that the dreadful face of Christ
Might look from the rent clouds, not as he looked
A loving guest at Bethany, but stern
As Justice and inexorable law." —Whittier.

On the 19th day of May, 1780, the inhabitants of New England and the adjacent parts were the trembling witnesses of an event in nature which has never been fully described nor analyzed. We refer to the widespread and mysterious withdrawal of the natural sunlight, which so startled our ancestors and covered the land with gloom on that memorable occasion; a phenomenon in its kind never experienced before nor since in the country, and which, while religion attempted to account for it as a fulfilled prophecy, yet science has not unfolded its quality nor discovered its cause. Ninety-one years have passed away since the extraordinary darkness transpired; the living witnesses are getting to be few, but still our source of information concerning all the features of the day and night are ample, and before us as we write are over forty different testimonies relating to the scene we seek exhaustively to depict. They are mainly from persons who saw what they describe, and embrace evidence from historical collections, histories of States and towns, histories of the Revolution, journals of Legislatures, newspapers of the day, sermons of the ministry, personal memoirs, memoirs of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Professors in colleges, poets, philosophers, physicians, scientists and savans; among them Noah Webster, LL. D., who wrote, "I stood and viewed the phenomenon, for which no satisfactory cause has been assigned."

The year we have named was celebrated for its numerous auroral exhibitions in this latitude. They covered the midnight heavens with corruscations of red and silver, and streamed out like lightning, seeming, says one writer, fairly to flash warmth in the face. A single sun spot over 50,000 miles in diameter was seen with the naked eye by Wm. Herschel the previous year, and in 1780 others were visible and recorded by Lelande. The winter preceding May was marked by extraordinary severity. Snow lay on the ground from the middle of November to the middle of April four feet deep everywhere. In December and January, a snow storm continued seven successive days, and the snow fell to the depth of four feet on a level in this single storm, with drifts eight and ten feet high. Sheep were buried in the drifts for many days, and even men and animals perished with cold. Long Island Sound was crossed by heavy artillery on the ice.

Narragansett Bay froze over so hard that men traversed the ice from Providence to Newport in skating parties, and from Fall River to Newport, loads of wood were conveyed on the ice through Bristol Ferry. The journal of the House of Representatives of Connecticut records it as "the severest hard winter within the memory of man," followed by "the most backward spring recollected by aged and observing citizens." War, too, added its rigors to the dreary aspect of nature.

The month of May was dry and cold. Previous to the 19th, a vapor filled the air for several days. There was a smell of sulphur in the air, and on the day of the great darkness, Etna discharged lava from a new mouth, and the eruption was accompanied with violent earthquakes in Southern Italy. The morning of the 19th was overcast with some clouds, and rain fell over the country, with lightning and thunder. The sun on rising shone not with its accustomed clearness. Its face seemed veiled, and the aspect somewhat lurid. Scarcely was any motion in the air; what there was of wind came from the south-west; vanes were not stirred, and sails and flags hung idle. By nine o'clock in the forenoon, without previous warning, the darkness stole gradually on, with a luminous appearance near the horizon, as if the obscuring cloud had dropped down from overhead. There was yellowness of the atmosphere that made clear silver assume a grass green hue. Then a dense, undefinable vapor settled rapidly and without aerial movement over all the land and ocean from Pennsylvania to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the darkness it caused increasing by degrees until the sunlight was effectually shut out. Ordinary cloud it was not. The rapidity with which so large an extent of country was enveloped, precludes the possibility of supposing this to have been a natural cloud moving laterally. Besides this, the day was too calm to imagine such a thing. Down came the darkness, thicker and thicker. By ten o'clock the air was loaded with a heavy gloom. The heavens were tinged with a yellowish or faint red; lurid look increased; few, if any, ordinary clouds were visible. The sun, in disappearing, took on a brassy hue. The lurid, brassy color spread everywhere, above and below. The grass assumed the color of the sky, and all out-doors wore a sickly, weird and melancholy aspect, a dusky appearance as if seen through a smoked glass. Nature donned a frightful look. No one had seen the like before, and the hearts of thousands grew faint with fear. So low was the overhanging vapor that it appeared to rest upon the very earth, and the hills in some places could not be seen at the distance of only half a mile. Especially was this true at Pepperell and Groton in Massachusetts. By eleven o'clock it was as night itself, and from this time until three in the afternoon, the darkness was truly extraordinary and frightful. Some reported that the sun's disk could be seen through the murky gloom at the period of the deepest darkness, but this seems hardly probable. At sea, the air was thick and had an unusual smell and a most unnatural appearance. Generally there was a sooty smell prevalent, and in a few places some drops of rain fell. Dr. Tenney, with a philosophic eye to turn the sable curtain into gold, wrote that all nature wore a resplendent and beautiful tint, the earth and trees appearing as if adorned with an enchanting glow! Mr. Temple of Boston saw things in somber color, and a letter to friends in England, described the scene as if a veil was drawn over all things, which he seemed to look through and see the heaven beyond it; while at Newburyport, a pious woman wrote: All nature seemed hushed, as though Jehovah was about to make himself known by some mighty act. Every eye was turned upward, every one inquiring: What is going to take place? At three o'clock, the light came on from the west, and the heavens, at its coming, looked more brassy than at any previous time, while there were seen in some places quick flashes or corruscations, not unlike the Aurora Borealis. Gradually, and to the immense relief of more than half a million of people, the darkness passed off. Such was the general appearance of the earth and atmosphere.

The extent of the darkness was greater than is related of any other similar phenomenon on record, not excepting the celebrated dark days over Egypt and Judea. It reached south to the northern half of Pennsylvania, and from thence along the coast northeast to the wilds of Maine, eastward to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and out at sea, 120 miles south east of Boston, and undoubtedly much farther; west to the valleys of Lake Champlain and the Hudson river, and north into undefined regions in Canada. Portland, Boston, Hartford, New York, West Point, and Albany were all affected by it. But the degrees of darkness differed in different places—the deepest night settling over New England. A tract of land and sea 800 miles in length and 400 miles in breadth, embracing an area of 320,000 square miles, was known to be covered by the cloud, and so far as can be ascertained, a population of 700,000 souls sat for a portion of the day and night in a gloom more or less profound and inexplicable.

Just how dark the day was is attested by indisputable evidence. The hour and minute could not be discovered on the face of a clock or watch by persons of unimpaired eyesight. Candles became an absolute necessity both out of doors and in, as it was impossible to transact ordinary business without them. Fires on the hearthstones shone as brightly as on a moonless November evening, and all dinner tables were set with lighted candles upon them as if it were the evening repast. The keenest eye indoors could not see to read common print. So far beyond any ordinary fog was the effect that stages on the road either put up at the nearest hotel during the mid-day hours, or carried candles or lanterns to enable the perplexed driver to well see his way. At Haverhill, N. H., at twelve at noon a man could not be seen in the road at a distance of only twenty rods, while an hour or two later the captain of a ship forty leagues at sea south-east of Boston was compelled to light a large candle to enable him to perceive his instruments and thereby steer his vessel. "It was so dark at noon," writes Dr. Adams, "that we could not tell one person from another in a room with three large windows in it." A writer in the Massachusetts Spy informs us that at the time of the greatest obscurity the light was less than the volume of light from the moon, while many other eye-witnesses assert unequivocally that the greatest darkness was fully equal to what is the season of "candle-lighting" in the evening. No London fog ever equaled this. The astronomer of Paxton, Samuel Stearns, calculated that the ratio of light borne by the moon at its full, as compared with the full light of the sun, is as 1 to 100,000. Later French savans make the difference as 1 to 300,000 and even 1 to 800,000. But if Stearns was right, the sunlight of that remarkable day was immeasurably less than that of a common, clear, sunny day, the ordinary sunlight being reduced below the light of the full moon. Connecticut went totally under the cloud. The journal of her House of Representatives puts on record the fact that "none could see to read or write in the House, or even at a window, or distinguish persons at a small distance, or perceive any distinction of dress, &c., in the circle of attendants; therefore, at eleven o'clock, adjourned the House till two oclock afternoon." At Ipswich, Mass., at half-past eleven, several educated gentlemen tested the depth of the darkness by attempting to read large print in a room with three windows of twenty-four panes, each, facing the south and east; but, although their eyesight was good, they could not at all distinguish the words. At twelve with the three windows still uncovered and open, substances, by the light of a candle, cast well-defined shadows on the wall, and shadow profiles and images were as distinct and sharp in their outlines as in the evening. At one o'clock, a single gleam of light, coming hitherto from the east, was wholly withdrawn or shut out, and it became darker than at any previous time. The amazement of the party was very great. At two o'clock the gloom that had disappeared in the east shone faintly in the west, as if the obscuring cloud had uplifted or passed over; but the gentlemen, with the three windows still open, found it necessary to have two candles on the table to enable them to appropriate the dinner now set before them. At four, the company said they had passed a very unexpected night together, and then parted, each musing on the strange adventure. With all these facts before us, we can discover no extravagance in the language of the Boston Gazette, when its editor exclaimed, "In short, there was the appearance of midnight at noonday." Men were awe-struck; all busy sounds of labor ceased; and a calamity of some kind, none knew what, was confidently imagined to be approaching. It seemed, says one, like a great roof closing down upon the earth, and shutting out the glorious sunlight forever.

The general results of the darkness afford an interesting study both for the scientist and the divine. The natural world was singularly affected. All the brute and feathered creation seemed puzzled and agitated. The birds ceased to fly, and hid themselves in the branches of the trees. As the darkness increased, they sang their evening songs as they do at twilight, and then became silent. Pigeons on the wing took to the shelter of the forest as they do at night. The whip-poor-will, as if it were truly night, cheerfully sang his song through the gloomy hours. Woodcocks, which are night birds, whistled as they only do in the night time. Bats came out of their hiding places and flew about. The fowls marched solemnly to their roosts as they do only at nightfall, and after cackling for awhile over the mystery of so short a day, became still. Cocks crowed as is their custom at nightly intervals and the early breaking of day. Frogs peeped their evening concert, and dogs whined or howled and ran away as on the approach of an earthquake. The herds of cattle on New England's thousand hills sought the shelter of the shed or barnyard, lowing as they came to the gate, and sheep huddled around in a circle with their heads inward—the invariable token of apprehended danger.

On the human family the effect was still more curious and terrifying. The mechanic left his tools in the shop, the farmer, his plow in the furrow, and each moved in silent and marveling mood toward the barn or dwelling. On the home threshold, they were met by pale and anxious women, who tremblingly inquired, "What is coming?" The alarmed traveler, seeking the sympathy of his fellow-man as one impressed with a sense of impending peril, put up at the nearest house, and mingled his anxious questionings and forebodings with those of the family. Strong men met and spoke with surprise on their countenances, and little children peered timidly into the deepening gloom, and then sought the sheltering parental arms. Schools broke up in affright, and the wondering pupils scampered homeward with many expressions of childish fear. The inevitable candle shone out at the windows of all dwellings—every countenance gathered blackness—all hearts were filled with fear of an approaching, unparalleled storm, or the occurrence of a terrestrial convulsion; but it was not the blackness of the storm cloud, such as sometimes with frightful agitation breaks over a single city; it was the silent spreading of the pall-cloth over the earth by strong, invisible hands. Many anecdotes of terror are related. Men well remembered the earthquake of a quarter of a century before, before, but this darkening of the earth at noonday—what could it portend? In Boston from 11 or 1 till 3 o'clock, business was generally suspended and shops were closed. Those who had the courage to continue them open, illuminated them artificially. At Groton, a court was in session in a meeting-house full of large windows, as was the old style of houses of worship; but at half-past eleven all faces began to wear a somber hue, whereupon magistrates and people followed suit with all New England, and called for lighted candles—gas and kerosene being then unknown in the land.

Very little of jesting or humor concerning the day was indulged in. Indifferent persons who were enthusiastic and anxious during the darkness gave way to some raillery as soon as the shadow disappeared before the welcome shining of the sun. When the news was carried to England, gentlemen who were prone to laugh at the expected discomfiture of the then revolutionary colonies interpreted the darkness allegorically of the gloom thrown over the minds of the "Boston rebels" by reason of the reduction of Charleston, the defeat of Clinton, etc.; but when subsequent letters confirmed the tidings and asserted the event to have been a sober, literal fact, astonishment knew no bounds. Meanwhile the jeering tories sent home word that it was the devil spreading his wings over the northern rebellious colonies, and if they do not repent, the next time he will certainly fly off with them all." But the answer from England was: "I do not believe all the wise men of Boston will be able to explain it."

But it cannot be denied that the predominating feeling on that day was awe and fear. At many a dinner table no food was eaten; the family sat pale and often silent. Amazement hushed all boisterous sounds. If any spoke, it was in a low, subdued tone. Pious fathers took down the family Bible, read it reverently, and then kneeled and prayed. Prof. Samuel Williams of Harvard College testified years after that the terror "surpassed description." The bells were rung in the large towns, and the people in masses forsook their toils and crowded into the churches. Thousands sought the minister for an explanation of the darkness, who, in response, took Matt. 24: 29, 30, or Rev. 6: 12, or Isa. 13: 10, or Ez 32: 7, or Joel 2: 31, or some other sacred prediction of the darkening of the sun, and improved upon them in sermons on the Last Day. The neighbors flocked around holy men, who calmly pointed them to the Lamb of God as their only refuge at all times. Some, with lanterns, went from house to house with warnings on their lips. The darkness was compared to that which overspread Judea at the crucifixion of our Savior, and it was asserted to be not a whit less divinely caused. Sober men, unaccustomed to such a freak of nature, deemed the Day of doom at the door. We cannot sneer at these alarms; they were legitimately born. President Dwight, an adult eye-witness, asserts this to have been "the general opinion." Even the gathered wisdom of the Council of Connecticut waited and listened, writes Whittier,

"To hear the thunder of the wrath of God Break from the hollow trumpet of the cloud."

The darkness of the day having been succeeded for an hour or two before evening by a partially clear sky, and the shining of the sun, still obscured by the black and vapory mist, this interval was followed by a return of obscuration with greater density, that rendered the first half of the night hideously dark beyond all former experience of probably a million of people who saw it. From soon after sunset till midnight, no ray of light from moon or star penetrated the vault above. It was pronounced "the blackness of darkness." Horses in numerous instances, when wanted for service, could not be compelled to quit the stable. Others on the highway, unable to see for the darkness, seemed to be seized with fear, and moved their feet cautiously and with bewildering hesitation, as if apprehensive of plunging into an abyss. Travelers on foot, who supposed themselves accquainted with every foot of the road, lost their way in familiar localities. Some, totally bewildered, shouted for aid but few rods from their own door. Lost persons in some instances felt their way home, being guided by the fence. Dr. Adams says almost everybody who was out that night got lost. Sharp eyes could not distinguish between the heavens and the earth, the line of the horizon was totally invisible, and large white substances placed before the eyes could not be discovered either in their color or outline. At nine o'clock the moon rose at her full, but had not the least effect to dispel the death-like shadow. At between nine and ten, a sea captain more than a hundred miles from New England coast, ordered his men to take in some sails, but they could not find their way without light of candles from one mast to another. Like a chain, this blackness bound the whole coast line for more than 200 leagues. It was compared to a solid wall, impenetrable and forbidding, and had an oppressive, choking, overpowering effect on all who tried to brave it. At Salem an intelligent writer said: "Perhaps it was never darker since the children of Israel left the house of bondage." Dr. Samuel Adams and Hon. Wheeler Martin, as also others, testify that it could be felt" on waving the hand in the air; language used by Moses concerning the supernaturally and miraculously produced cloud that shut down over Egypt, causing a "thick darkness" of three days' duration.

To be concluded next week.

For the COMPANION.

Sufficiency of Christ.

In No. 46, under the above heading, is an article from the pen of brother S. M. Minnich, which I had intended to notice, but for want of time I did not till now; and even now I must be content with a passing notice. In that article are the following grave charges against the brotherhood:

"We (expect justification) by the decrees of the church."—"We preach the ordinances and customs of the church more than we preach Christ." "We have passed decisions and enacted ordinances, that, if all had been put in a book, it would have been more difficult to have obeyed that book than the Mosaic law and their traditions."—We might cease to practice some things and only forsake the traditions of the elders."—"Brethren, we would convert more souls for Christ, if we would leave of our peculiarities, and not know anything save Jesus Christ and him crucified."

With all due charity to my Christian brother, I must protest against the foregoing assertions; for such they are, as they are not all facts, unless I do not understand his use of the pronoun "We." If he means either himself or the particular congretion where he holds membership, I have nothing to say, as I have never met with them; but if he means the brotherhood in general, I am compelled, by the force of facts, to deny his bitter imputations.

It has been my lot, though in comparative obscurity, to meet with the brethren in many places, and I have the first congregation to meet with yet, of which any considerable part of these things might be said with truth. I have, in my travels, come to places where considerable was said and done to maintain and enforce the decisions of our Annual meetings; but observation has taught me that it is invariably an unpleasant and forced service—that there are reckless, disorderly, and refractory members there, who make such a course necessary. I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I here assert with great confidence in the declaration, that, if the brother faithfully described the condition of the church at Antioch, Ind., they have among them nominal members, who love themselves more than they do the Church, and who would do more for worldly gain and carnal advantage than they would for the peace, unity, and harmony of the brotherhood, and for the prosperity of the cause of Christ. Christ laid aside his glory and humbled himself by coming to a sin-cursed world—assuming humanity—suffering ignominy and pain, and death for our redemption and salvation; but these self-sufficient, self-confident, rule-defying and council-accusing, refractory members, will not deny themselves even of those things which are of doubtful propriety, if not manifestly sinful. By such men and women, who have crept in amongst us unawares, the way of truth—the plain, humble, modest, unpretending and peculiar life of the Church of Christ—is evil spoken of; the counsels of the elders and of the church are treated with contempt, and our beloved fraternity is reproached. Were it not for such unfaithful members, the brother would have no cause to complain as he does, and to make such serious charges. If I am mistaken, I expect to be corrected.

But if such unhappy circumstances call forth so much unpleasant preaching and labor, to maintain order and to preserve the gospel simplicity and purity of the church, I cannot understand why the brother should suppose that "we would convert more souls for Christ, if we would leave off our peculiarities." This is a manifest contradiction of the additional clause, "And not know anything 'save Jesus Christ and him crucified.'" This is indeed enough to know; but this knowledge is very comprehensive. To know Jesus Christ and him crucified, is to know him in his condescension, in his self-sacrificing spirit and life, in his humility and meekness, in his gentleness and love, in his toils and sufferings. It is not, Jesus Christ in his exaltation, in his glory and triumphant reign, but "Jesus Christ and HIM CRUCIFIED." It is not merely to know that Jesus Christ was crucified; but to practically know Jesus Christ, and so also to know Christ crucified. He who knows Christ thus, must possess the peculiarities of the life of Christ: he must crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts; he must reckon himself dead to sin and alive to holiness; he must not be conformed to this world, but transformed by the renewing of his mind; he must practically prove what is the good, acceptable, and perfect will of the Lord; he must deny himself of all ungodliness and worldly lusts; he must not be in sympathy with the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye nor the pride of life; he must be a lover of peace; he must be gentle, humble, meek, forgiving, submissive, kind, forbearing, and a lover of all good things. He of whom all these things may be said, is, no doubt, peculiar in many things; and I am certain he could spend a long and fruitful life among the Brethren and never once be censured for violating the decisions of our Annual Meeting—the brother's "traditions of the elders." Such a brother is more influential in winning and converting souls for Christ, than are the whole force of those who are continually stirring up strife, discord, and insurrection. If it were even true that some of the decisions of our Annual Meetings should seem a little oppressive, would it not tend more to the glory of God to quietly and cheerfully submit, than to parade our insubordination before the church and the world? Yes, and we would lead many more to Christ. In our humble, united, orderly, and consistent walk and conversation, would be seen and felt the power of God's love shed abroad in our hearts and beaming in our lives; and sinners would be converted to Christ, by the gospel of Christ which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Oh that we were perfectly united in our desires and efforts to save, not only our own souls, but sinners from the power of sin, the contaminations of the flesh, and the condemnation of the proud and the wicked!

M. S. Boon.

REMARKS: We had commenced a reply to the article referred to, while it was yet in the hands of the compositor; but circumstances interfered that we could not yet complete it. The foregoing expresses so many of our thoughts that we now feel like passing it with these remarks. While we are favorable to investigation and a free interchange of thought on everything pertaining to the religion of Jesus Christ, we are opposed to bickerings, to cutting personalities and criticisms, and to everything that savors of contention or reproach. If we would only submit to the counsel of our experienced, tried and faithful brethren, without murmuring, and thus demonstrate the power of our holy profession, we could do much for the advancement of the cause of Christ. We want our brethren to be watchful and prayerful. We want them to write for our columns; but we hope that great care will be taken not to write what is of doubtful propriety, or what might lead to harm. Let love fill the heart and peace and good will guide the mind, and we are sure that our contributions will be full of kindness and purity, and will awaken such sentiments and feelings in the hearts of our readers.

J. W. B.

For the COMPANION.

Invitations and Warnings.

"And the Spirit and the bride say, Come." Rev. 22: 17.

The word of God abounds with invitations and warnings to the children of men, to arouse them from that sleepy and careless state in which they are living. If we cast our eyes around us, and take in at a glance, the actions of mankind, and see how they are engaged in the pursuits and pleasures of life, some seeking for wealth—how they may enlarge their earthly possessions and thereby distinguish themselves in this world by being able to oppress the poor– those who have not been so fortunate as themselves. Others are seeking after the empty phantom of honor, desiring to be elevated to positions of responsibility and power, so that they may be enabled to rule their fellow-men as they desire or see fit, by some arbitrary laws that have been enacted by themselves, and framed for that very purpose. Others still are giving themselves up to the pleasures of this world, seeking how they may gratify their carnal inclinations, and to all appearances caring nothing for those around them. These things being so seen by a careful observer, he would be led to the conclusion that there is no higher sphere for man to labor in than that which only tends to the gratification of his carnal nature and the fulfilling of all his earthly desires. But dark and dreary as man's actions and conduct would make this world seem, (had we nothing more to direct us,) we feel rejoiced to know that man was created for a nobler and better purpose than to spend his time in search of wealth, honor or carnal pleasures and enjoyments. In the language of inspiration which forms the heading of this article, "The Spirit and the bride (the church) say, Come." It is delightful to know that the revelation of God closes with such free and full invitation to all the children of men, to come to that heavenly feast which is prepared, not for the wealthy, honorable or pleasure-seeking of earth, but for those who have denied themselves of these, and have taken upon themselves to follow Christ in the manner directed in his word. And it is with earnest and sincere invitations that all are invited to come and enjoy the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ Jesus or Lord, so that all may, in due time, under a gracious Providence, be restored to Christian fellowship and union with our divine Master. Is it not delightful to meet with the saints of the Most High, where aspirations of prayer and praise are ascending to the Father of tender mercies, that they may be crowned with light and immortal glory, and rise higher and higher in the knowledge of God and the Lord Jesus, so that they may be enabled to discover some of the beauties, and the bright and lasting glories, and the true riches of that heavenly and eternal city of the great Creator, God, the Almighty. To hear such thrilling aspirations, it makes us feel that we are near the gate-way of heaven—near that great white throne, where angels and arch-angels are bowing and bending in humble adoration to their sovereign Lord. When we contemplate the plan of redemption and salvation, as it has been provided for mankind by the Lord Jesus, we wonder, and think it strange that so few embrace the offers of salvation, when there are so many invitations and earnest calls in the word of God; and then in connection with all these the calls and invitations of the church through her ministers. After all these invitations, if any are lost, they must reflect on themselves. And besides all these invitations and calls, there are awful warnings and threatenings in his word, which we cannot now notice. We direct those desiring an acquaintance with them to search the word of God, and not waste their time; for the present is all we are certain of, and it passes while we think. Let us not, like a Felix of old, say, "Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season I will call for thee." That convenient season will never come. God says, "To-day if you will hear my voice, harden not your hearts: behold now is the day of salvation." Let us remember that true saying, "Procrastination is the thief of time." Always beware of to-morrow; to-morrows have been and are peopling the regions of despair with lost souls. Oh! come; for "the Spirit and the bride say, Come;" all things are ready. He endured the death of the cross—the crown of thorns, amid the cry of vengeance that went up from the accumulated multitude. Oh! that hour of agony! the luminaries refused to see it, and veiled themselves in darkness "When Christ such mighty anguish bore,"—so that you and I, kind reader, might have life everlasting, and escape the awful doom of the finally impenitent. Then

"Come, all ye weary ones, and rest
On Jesus' sympathizing breast!
For you he came to earth and died,
For you was pierced his bleeding side.

"Come, listen to his voice to-day,
Nor for another hour delay
And own him worthy to receive
The noblest honors you can give."

S. W. WILT.

Rural Village, Pa.

For the COMPANION.

Importance of Singing.

Singing the praises of God is truly a sublime and noble exercise. There is no exercise in which the human mind can be employed more sacred and lofty than praising God; and singing his praise, was enjoined upon Christians by divine authority; therefore, it is of great importance in the worshipping of the Divine Being. It is a noble vocation for the human voice: it calls forth our better natures, refines the feeling, and has a tendency to draw our wandering minds from the terrestial to the celestial sphere. The Divine influence, derived from earnest singing exercises, is ofttimes manifested: it speaks of our Savior's love for humility; it sinks deep into the pious heart, and brings forth to the soul, a sweet foretaste of heaven: it creeps gently into the sinner's heart, and kindles a flame of love for Jesus. Then with what fervency ought we to sing God's praise; with what emotion should we reverence and adore him, since holy influences emanate more abundantly from profound earnestness and zeal, realized on the part of those who are the happy participants in such a sacred exercise, who cherish the commands of God with meekness, and long-suffering; and deny this world of all its vain pleasures and renown, that they may be called to immortal life, on the resurrection morn; then to renew the praise and adoration that forever belongs to God.

The Christian, as he passes along in the narrow way, enjoys a great delight in singing; as he feels the necessity of this important exercise in worshipping the Almighty God. He is often assailed by the enemy of his soul, that lurks along his pathway; he implores for divine interposition, to sustain his soul in the trying hour, that its assailant may be quickly conquered, and peace and happiness be restored to the soul; he looks unto God, and expresses gratitude for the inexpressible love, which was manifested towards him by a kind providence, and determines, by the aid of God, to double his diligence in the Christian race, and thus realize a firmer consecration to the laws of heaven, that his soul may be more fully enabled to resist all the fiery darts of the wicked one. The progress in his divine life realized, he sings triumphantly as he travels on.

Singing songs of praise and redeeming love, is the happy employment of the heavenly throng, who have left the shores of mortality and soared away to the spirit land, where peace is never disturbed and love supremely reigns. Oh sinner! arise from your state of lethargy, and sing songs of praise to him, who has died to save you.

Singing is an exercise that pious souls enjoy on the dying bed. The last singing of a saint, when his departure from this world is approaching, is a scene of deep solemnity. When he nears the river of death, he fears not; for death to him is joy, as he only departs to live again in the eternal world, where he hopes, with new, immortal powers, to sing with saints and angels the power and glory of God. "Sing unto the Lord a new song." "Sing with the Spirit and understanding," which is a Christian precept. Have undaunted courage in the service of the Lord, so that when death arrives, you can say, "Come welcome death, thou end of fears I'll gladly go with thee."

JOHN W. KRABILL.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Dec. 2, 1873.

Editorial Correspondence.

Saturday, 8th. Visited Emmanuel Holsinger's, another cousin. His wife, sister Emma, is a zealous member of the church. They have homesteaded a quarter section of land, which will make a beautiful farm. Cousin Levi also has a quarter section of very fine prairie land. Brother Simon took us to the above place with his oxen team. This was the first oxen team ride we ever had the pleasure of enjoying; and we did enjoy it, as it afforded us some amusement. The cattle make much better time than we had anticipated; but need considerable prompting, in which our cousin is quite an expert.

In the evening we went to cousin Alexander's "Holsinger No. 4," as some of the neighbors call him. He arrived in this section only about a month ago, from Ogle county, Ills. He has taken a "file" on an eighty acre tract, and has a sod house put up on it in which they are living. Sod houses are quite common in this country. The walls are made of sod, and are about two feet thick. Some of them are nicely plastered inside, and have wooden floors and board roofs. Over the board roofs are placed several courses of sod. But the greater number are floorless, and are covered with sticks, grass and sod, and are very poorly ventilated. They could be made very comfortable, but most of the people here are poor homesteaders, who had scarcely means enough to bring them to this country, and are required to economize in every way. But by industry and economy, in a few more years they will see better times. We hope they may, for they certainly deserve it, for breaking the way of civilization into this beautiful and fertile country.

Sunday, 9th. Brother Alex. Holsinger brought us to brother Simon Holsinger's, where it was appointed for me to preach at 11 a. m. There was a fair attendance and good attention. In the evening, preaching again at the same place. The house is 12 x 22, and has one partition. Some of the furniture was placed outside, and all available space prepared for seats. In the evening the people began to assemble, and before the appointed hour had arrived, many more had collected than could be accommodated with seats. A slight cracking in the joist admonished us that the house was too full; With great wisdom and coolness, a number of gentlemen quietly withdrew, and left the house mostly to the ladies. As the evening was very pleasant, all could hear through the open door and windows. The people were very attentive. It was said to have been the largest religious meeting known to this neighborhood. We endeavored to suit our three discourses together, so as to give the people as much of the doctrine as possible. Everything passed off quietly and no one gainsayed the word, at least. Whether it will be accepted, time will tell. We think we did our part. Hope the members here will back up our preaching by living out the doctrine, and thus they will water our planting: for the increase we must look to God. Brother Simon and sister Carrie Holsinger, were principally instrumental in getting up the meetings. We hope the Lord will reward them for their labor of love, not only toward us, but for our Master's cause. There are now six members in this neighborhood, and at our meetings we had eight members, all Holsingers. We feel assured that a minister, by moving to this place, and preaching the word, could build up a fine congregation. We are tempted to try it.

Monday, 10th. Brother Simon, with whom we had again lodged, took us to Carlton for our mail, &c. Received encouraging news from home. What comfort a friendly letter from home does afford! Had an opportunity of interviewing a well-digging operation. It is done by boring a hole into the ground with an anger, about ten inches in diameter. The instrument is shaped very much like a wood auger, and has a driving and guiding screw. The shaft is put together in sections, and must be taken apart and put together, in digging a deep well. In the up-lands they are required to sink from fifty to seventy feet to get water.

Returned to brother Simon's in the evening, where we are writing. In the morning, if the Lord will, we expect to start for Kansas. We have employed brother Alexander Holsinger to take us over with his two horse team. We intend to pass through Jewell county into Russell county, and return in about eight days. Object: to spy out the land. The weather is exceedingly fair, and has been for the last four days. To-day it was too warm to be comfortable; the sun shone oppressively warm. We are very anxious that it should continue fair until after our return from Kansas.

Tuesday 11. Set out for our Nebraska trip early in the morning. Sister Carrie supplied us with a lunch, upon which we dined at the house of D. Mulloch, in Nuckles county. The day was rather unpleasant for travel in open wagon, the winds being very high, and rather cool. Passed over some very beautiful prairie. Lodged with Mr. Christian Hoy, near White Rock, Kansas. Mr. Hoy treated us very kindly. He is a native of Denmark, and worships with the Baptists. He recognizes God in his family. He informed us that a Dunkard preacher, by the name of Switzer lived about six to seven miles from him. Accordingly on the morning of Wednesday, 12th, we set out to find brother Switzer. On our way we visited the White Rock Mounds, which proved to be quite a curiosity. They are several hundred feet high from the creek near the base. The surface is covered with a sandy soil, and a thick coat of prairie grass. At a few places the white rock crop out, and quarries have been opened. We have fine specimens of the rock with us. Also of other curious stone, which we think are the blossom of coal and iron. Among these bluffs, in a fertile valley, about six miles south-west, we found the house of our brother James L. Switzer. But we were very sorry brother James was not at home. The sister, however, treated us very hospitably, and sent us on our way refreshed. From her we learned that there are about forty members in this county, Jewell, and that brother Switzer has much traveling and preaching to do. Hope the Lord may bless his labors. We now aimed to reach the house of brother D. M. Balliet, but when we reached

Jewell City, it was so near night that we could not venture to go fourteen miles farther. So we put up at the Jewell House, and were well entertained. I also enjoyed a literary feast with the editor of the Jewell county Diamond. Success to his efforts:

Thursday 13th. Reached the house of brother David M. Balliet, at about noon, after traveling over a very hilly country. But we were sorry not to find brother B. at home, as he had started out upon a buffalo hunt a few days before our arrival. Sister Balliet is a daughter of brother Michael Reber of Waterloo, Iowa, and no one could receive us with more affection. They appear to be fully as well fixed as any of their neighbors. A visit from brother and sister Reber would be appreciated, and might be mutually profitable.

Thence we aimed for brother Peter Wolf's, Cawker City, Mitchell county, where we arrived about an hour after dark. We were kindly taken in for the night, and enjoyed a pleasant season with our brother and his family. Brother Wolf is engaged in the Nursery business, and has a fine lot of fruit and ornamental trees, growing, and some ready for market. His greatest trouble appears to be to protect his trees from the gnawing teeth of the rabbits, which abound in great numbers. If we could have remained there a few days we might have devoured several of them at least.

The Worth of Right Feeling.

"And he looked up, and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury. And he also saw a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites. And he said Of a truth I say unto you that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all. For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God, but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had." Luke 21: 1—5.

The importance of good works and a practical Christianity are taught in the Scriptures with a frequency, and urged upon us from considerations that plainly show that no Christian character can be complete, and no Christian hope reliable without them. And we shall not tax the reader's time, or occupy space in our article to prove this. It will be readily admitted by all who have read the Scriptures with only an ordinary degree of attention and candor. Our object is to present another feature in Christian life, namely, right feeling.

We may remark, first, upon this portion of gospel history, that the contributions of money for religious purposes is a divine institution. "And the king called for Jehoiada the chief, and said unto him, Why hast thou not required of the Levites to bring in out of Judah and out of Jerusalem the collection, according to the commandment of Moses, the servant of the Lord, and of the congregation of Israel, for the tabernacle of witness"? 2 Chron. 24: 6. "And they made a proclamation through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the Lord the collection that Moses, the servant of God, laid upon Israel in the wilderness," verse 9. It is no less an institution of the gospel than it was of the law of Moses. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gathering when I come," 1 Cor. 14: 2. God makes use of secular means to accomplish his purposes. He could, no doubt, accomplish them by other means. But he chooses this as one of his means for promoting the well-being of his creatures. And since it is more blessed to give than to receive, may we not include contributions for religious purposes among the means of grace? We think we may, though it is not usually regarded in this light. It seems to be regarded, at least by many, as a necessary evil, rather than a divine institution, and hence it is rather avoided than welcomed, and looked upon as a sacrifice rather than a privilege. If the prayers and praises, and worship of many of the members of the church, were given to God as reluctantly, and given in the same spirit as their contributions are given, they would have no expectations of God accepting them. Then if we would have our contributions or secular offerings which we offer to God acceptable to him as a religious offering, they should be offered in the same spirit that our worship is offered in.

Secondly: We may remark that Jesus observes both the amount and spirit of our secular contributions or offerings. Jesus occupied a position from which he could see all who approached the treasury, and also the amount that each contributed. And from his thorough knowledge of men, he knew the spirit in which the contributions were made. The position our Lord now occupies at the right hand of God, and the divine attributes he possesses, give him an opportunity of knowing all that is done for him and to him, and the spirit in which all is done. Let us remember this, and guard against any defect in our offering that would render it unacceptable to the Lord.

Thirdly: It further appears from the subject, that the spirit in which secular contributions are made, is more important in the estimation of Christ than the amount given. There were present on that occasion a variety of characters. He points out one in the crowd that did more than any other one present. And what was it that entitled this woman to the high commendation given her by our Lord? It was because her feeling was right. Her exterior perhaps was not prepossessing—perhaps it indicated poverty; yet she possessed a noble spirit, and cast all she had into the treasury of the Lord.

This right feeling which so highly commended the woman in the temple, was considered greater by our Lord than wealth. We are informed that there were "rich men" present. And these were no doubt honored, and perhaps by some worshipped because of their wealth. These received the adulations of the multitude. But there was one person present who estimated real worth by a different rule to what the world does. In casting his eye over the crowd assembled for the professed object of worshipping God, his attention was not arrested by purple robes and gaudy attire. On these he pronounces no encomiums. He who set aside the ordinary rule for measuring true worth, and applied one more just, was the Son of God. It had been said of him in propheey, "He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears," Isa. 11:3. The rule by which he judged had respect to Christian character and not to mere appearance. And in the analysis of Christian character by Christ, the great judge of character, right feeling holds an important place among the elements that constitute Christian character. Hence, while he passed by the rich, he pronounced an encomium upon a poor lonely widow. And why? Because he saw her heart was in her offering. "She of her penury had cast in all the living that she had."

The poor widow in giving her two mites, according to the judgment of Christ, had given more than all the rich. In what respect does she give more? It could not have been more pecuniarily, for in this respect most likely she gave the least that was given. But the sense in which she gave more than all, was no doubt to be taken in a religious sense. It was more religiously, because her heart was given with her gift.

Hence we may learn from this subject that God in estimating the value of our gifts, estimates them not according to the real amount given, but according to the feeling that prompts the gift. According to this rule, a small amount, two mites, given cheerfully and willingly, is more in the estimation of heaven, than thousands given grudgingly.

J. Q.

An Appeal.

Having assumed the responsibility of editor and publisher of the Christian Family COMPANION, we feel very anxious to make the paper one worthy in every respect of the patronage of the brotherhood and of the public; and our best endeavors will be used to make it such. Much of our time and attention will be given to our work. And with the means we hope to have at our command, and the blessing of God upon the united labors of all concerned in the work, we trust we shall be able to present to our readers such a supply of reading matter as will meet their various wants.

The object of the Christian Family COMPANION will be the promotion of Gospel Christianity. And in this age of false charity, of doubtful liberality toward unchristian doctrine, of all shades of religious opinions, of semi-scepticism, of cold formalism, of disgusting pride and extravagance in the nominal Christian church, every available help which warns where there is danger, that informs where instruction is needed, and that gives comfort to the desponding, should be laid hold of by all who wish to avoid error, and come to a full knowledge of the "truth as it is in Jesus." Such a help our paper humbly aspires to be.

We solicit your patronage, your agency, your sympathy, and your prayers. We offer you a good Christian Paper, and that weekly, for the low price of one dollar and a half per year. If an agent calls upon you, you can subscribe; if you will act as agent yourself, we shall be pleased to have you do so; if you can only send your own subscription, enclose it carefully in a letter, with your name and address written plainly, and send it to us. Address: James Quinter, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa.

Almanac for 1874.

Some of our patrons call for German Almanacs. We do not publish the Almanac in German; but we have a very large edition of the English, and it is filled with unusually interesting matter. We are now prepared to send out by return mail, any amount that may be ordered.

TERMS: Single copy, postpaid, 10 cents; six copies, 40 cents; and twelve copies, 75 cents.

We hope you will order at once. Do not be afraid of the money panic; for it is said to be over.

Acknowledgment.

The first Prospectus for 1874, that was returned to us, was sent in by a sister who is sojourning in Illinois. It was accompanied with $5.75, and orders to send the COMPANION to three persons named, and 1 doz. Almanacs to be sent to different parties. We would be pleased to give her name, but as she signs herself CHARITY, we dare not; but we return our warmest thanks to her for her liberality.

The Science of Health for December closes the Third Volume of this practical and independent Magazine. Its leading object is to teach the Science of Life, including all that relates to Recovering and Preserving Health, and promoting a higher physical and mental condition. Every family should read this Magazine. Among the contents are "The Potential Sex" in a Review of the race; "The Model School-Girl, who lost more than she gained, and how," with illustration; "What we want for Health, Comfort and Improvement at this season of the year;" "Woman's Dress," is considered by L. E. L.; "Disease and its treatment," by different schools; "Conceits of Convalescence;" "Walking as a Medicine," and how to take it; "Occupation as effecting Longevity;" "Seasonable Dishes," on Hygienic principles; "How to go to bed;" "California Fruits," "Yellow Fever;" "Cold Feet," and how to keep them warm, and many questions from corrrespondents are answered, and much general information given. It is published at $2.00 a year. A new volume begins with the next number. Now is the time to subscribe. Address, S. R. WELLS, Publisher, 389 Broadway, New York.

The New York Observer takes a bold stand against gift enterprises in the shape of picture premiums, offered to subscribers and said to be worth so much more than the price of the periodical. The Observer does not publish pictures but publishes news. Any person desiring a comprehensive newspaper, filled with just the news that every family wants, and free from any clap-trap, or objectionable matter of any kind; will hardly do better than by sending $3 to S. I. Prime & Co., 37 Park Row, New York.

The December number of Wood's Household Magazine is on our table. Its table of contents embraces the following articles: "A Better Country," An Engineer's Yarn, Our Party at Sea, Two Enthusiasts, Presence of Mind, Our Babies, Blessedness of riches, Misery Jippeau, Chapter VII, VIII. In addition to these articles are several pretty poems, a charming little Cottage Design, and editorial departments embracing Our Housekeeper, Correspondence, Literary Notices, &c. The engraving for this month is entitled "Old Folks."

TERMS: One dollar per year—or with chromo "Yosemite" one dollar and a half. Address,

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE.
Newburgh, N. Y.

GARDENERS and FLORISTS will find it to their advantage to subscribe for Vick's Floral Guide for 1874. It is to contain 200 pages; 500 engravings, and colored plate. Published Quarterly, at 25 cents a year. German edition at the same price. The January number is before us and we deem it both instructive and pleasing. Address, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Information Wanted.

I wish to learn the address of a brother and sister who have been visiting in Germany. My grandfather's name was Strausburg; and there is a town in Germany called after his name. I would like to find out about his estate for he was very rich. My husband died last February. My maiden name was Strausburg; and my mother's maiden name was Funderburg. I would also like to hear of John Holsinger, as he used to live here and sometimes visited us. I would also like to know where the children of brother Samuel are; and of cousin John Strausburg and his family. Address me at Bloomfield, Iowa.

Your sister
A. C. KINNEY.

EDITORS COMPANION: Please say to the brethren of West Virginia, that brother Daniel Wolfe and myself have returned safe to our families and found all well. We hope God's blessing may rest on the brethren and friends with whom we labored.

Also, we have received a letter from brother Grabill Meyers, stating that he will not be able to visit Eastern Md. this winter. Your brother in Christ, E. W. STONER.

Our Visit to the Churches Composing the Eastern District of Maryland and to the Churches in the Valley of Virginia.

BONSACKS, VA.
Nov. 15th, 1873.

On the 15th of October, I left the place I call my earthly home, took the eastward bound train, at Bonsacks, Va & Tenn. R. R., at 5 o'clock a. m. Was joined by my son J. C. Moomaw, at Petersburg, Va., he having preceded me a few days visiting the cities of Va. on business. Arrived at Norfolk, and took passage on the steamer "Adalaide" en route to Baltimore, at 8 o'clock p. m. Had a beautiful night's voyage on the bay; fine accommodations, smooth sea, &c. While on the boat we formed some pleasant acquaintances, among which was a Quaker friend, of the firm of Eliot Brothers, of Baltimore. In him we found a congenial spirit, especially upon the peace principles, upon which we had a very pleasant, and, to me, profitable conversation.

On the following morning, before our arrival at the city, a circumstance occured producing considerable excitement, and awakening some interest among the passengers and crew. An extremely heavy fog settling on the bay, rendered navigation difficult. Not being able to see the plainest object more than a few yards, and there being quite a number of vessels of every variety in the vicinity, there was danger of collision, only being able to avoid each other by signals, of which every variety were brought into requisition—the larger and more hoarse—the smaller and more shrill steam whistle, horns, bugles of almost every note, interspersed with the ringing of bells, the rattling of triangles and pans, all doing the best they could to make themselves heard, that their whereabouts might be known, the passengers and seamen all on deck watching to see what might happen. While upon this subject, I feel it due to this line of conveyance to say that it is among the cheapest and most pleasant routes that I have ever traveled. The distance, is about five hundred miles; and including two excellent meals, and state room, the fare was only eleven dollars and fifteen cents each.

From Baltimore we took the W. M. R. R. to Double Pipe Creek, about fifty miles distance, where we arrived on the evening of the 16th, at about 6 o'clock, where we were met by our indefatigable brother D. P. Sayler. Repairing to his house, we were introduced to his kind companion, took some refreshments, went to meeting, enjoyed a season of devotion; and then returned to the house for the night, ready to depart early on the morrow to perform the duty assigned us, and the work was arranged by brother S.; and we very soon learned that it was not intended that we should be idle during the time that we had given to make use of. Everything was suitably arranged, as to meetings, which were from one sermon to three days at a place, as circumstances seemed to indicate; and suitable conveyances were provided to take us from one place to another, up to the 3d of November, when we had decided to leave for Virginia.

On the morning of the 3d, we took the cars at Monrovia, to visit the churches in the Valley of Virginia. We arrived at our home on the 12th at 9 o'clock p. m., where we found all well. Our prayers, and the prayers of our brethren with whom, from time to time, we were associated in worship, fully answered: our lives and health were preserved; our son, who had been suffering under the hand of affliction for three years, and far from home the greater portion of that time, combating with disease and struggling for health, was safe at home, well, and in fine spirits; our daughter and her babe, who had been dangerously ill, had recovered and were in full glow of health. When contemplating these blessings, our heart swells with gratitude to God, and we pour out our soul in thankfulness to him as our great Benefactor.

The choicest of heaven's blessing seemed to attend us through our entire mission. The weather was almost uniformly beautiful—only two appointments in all our journey, interrupted by inclement weather,—our associations with brethren, sisters and friends, was very agreeable, indeed, and will never be forgotten while memory lasts. We met with many with whom we had former acquaintance, and found many new, and, to us, highly valued acquaintances; and the only thing that we regret in this connection is, that our association in many cases was of short duration. I avail myself of this mission to tender my sincere thanks to all for their kindness shown to us, which appeared to be so cordially bestowed; and may the good Lord, when parceling out his rewards to his children mete out a full share to those; and to those who have not named his name, may grace be afforded to influence them to form the resolution of the will for God, that they too may share the fruition of the joys in heaven.

I cannot close this communication without a eulogy upon the brethren and churches whom we visited. They seem to be generally alive to the cause of the Master, building new, enlarging and repairing their houses of worship, thus inviting attendance; and then earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, steadfastly resisting innovations and the new departures of a rising element in some other localities.

With reference to the many meetings that we attended, to avoid the tedious and monotonous relation of every circumstance, we will simply say, that we enjoyed them much, bore up exceedingly well under the labor; generally had large attendance, good order, and respectful, and, perhaps, we may not err if we say interested attention.

One incident, however, it may be my duty to mention, which was an exception to the general pleasantness of our labors. One of the churches that we visited, had gotten into disorder and the members seemed to be panting for relief; and there being a number of strange brethren and Elders present, the church concluded to hold a council to investigate the matter, and, if possible, to remove the cause; for which purpose the Elders present were constituted a committee to assist the church to hear the complaints and to give such advice as they thought wisest and best. The committee retiring, the complainants made to them their statements, which centered upon the Elder in charge. The issues were then made out by the committee, and presented before the accused in the hearing of the church. There was full liberty given for defence; but it appearing to the committee, that it would be best for all concerned, and for the glory of God, that he, the accused, be suspended from the office of Bishop, they so advised; and, submitting it to the church, the decision was almost unanimously approved. How very sad it is, that brethren, who have the gifts to introduce themselves to those important positions, should be so unguarded as to allow themselves to so dishonor those sacred trusts! Alas, for poor, frail humanity! As to the result of our labors, time must develop. For the time being, there was not much fruit visible; but we have cast our bread upon the waters, and it remains for our Father in Heaven, the disposer of events, to so overrule all things that it may be gathered at some future time, with the increase as it pleaseth him. May his blessing attend it all, so that it may arise to the glorifying of his ever blessed name. B F. Moomaw.

Robinson's Ecclesiastical Research.

This work is now entirely out of print, and cannot be purchased from the publishers, I therefore adopt this method of getting the work to examine. If any brother has a copy and will sell it, he will please inform me immediately. The book is very valuable, and hence parties owning the work may not be willing to sell; and if they are willing to loan it, they will give me a notice to that effect, and I will then inform them how to send the work. I will pay for transportation both ways, and also for the use of the book if demanded. Many of those old books are now entirely out of print and the only method left to get hold of them is to borrow.

J. H. Moore.

Urbana, Champaign Co., Ill.

Reply to Abel T. Shriver.

In No. 44, present volume of C. F. C, I notice an article over the signature of Abel T. Shriver, which purports to be an answer,—"Yankee fashion,"—to queries which appeared in C. F. C. a few No.'s back over my signature; but I see nothing like an answer in said article.

He asks, "How can a Sunday-school picnic be worldly conformity? and when did the world hold Sunday-school picnics?" Surely this is Yankee fashion. Now I do not wish to set up my judgment in opposition to the united wisdom of the brotherhood; and upon examining the Minutes of our A. M., I find that that body regards such things to be worldly. And I would ask A. T. S. to show us when heaven has ever held a picnic, or where we will find such a thing recorded in the life or teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ or any of his apostles. Did they hold frolics or pleasure parties? If he cannot show this, I shall take it for granted that they are worldly; for says He that spake as never man spake, "He that is not for me, is against me." So I see no middle ground, godly or worldly.

But as I perceive that A. T. S. is a believer in "Yankee fashions," I would ask, are we to infer from his asking, "How was Peter's fisher's coat different from other fisher's coats?" that we may follow all the foolish 'Yankee fashions" of the world, and wear as much finery and gewgaws as any of Satan's servants, and yet be followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene? We are reminded of what the apostle says of some that shall be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." Let us take heed, perhaps we are living in the days when God is to send to some strong delusions that they may believe a lie that they may be damned.

A. T. S. speaks of glorifying God by going to a picnic. Perhaps! there is a sense in which the damned in hell will glorify God! But it cannot be that he supposes those picnickers glorified God in that sense, but in no other sense. I do not believe that God is glorified in following all the foolish "Yankee fashions" of the world; and until A. T. Shriver, or some other person convinces me of my error, I will not be willing to sing high praises to the great goddess of fashion.

A. S. Chamberlin.

Conversion and Experience.

Brother Holsinger:

I have been long thinking of penning a little to the brethren and sisters in the Lord on my conversion and experience. Through the mercy and goodness of a blessed Father, I was brought to see my condition, and have been made truly to repent on account of my sins. For three long, long weeks I was in deep distress and trouble, and wrestled, and prayed mightily to my Savior for relief; but when I would go to Jesus in my troubles and trials, I felt as though he had turned a deaf ear to me, and did not intend to hear my supplications and groans. But at length, when I would take my Testament and sit down to read, I could find a great deal of consolation. Oh the cheering words, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I thank God to-day, that all my troubles and trials were not in vain, I persevered in that way until the 5th day of May. Oh, I can never forget that day! As I have often heard it said, "The darkest hour is just before day," so it was with me. That day death presented itself in various forms. I thought it could not be that I would live till the week's end. My husband and mother were both from home at the time, and there was no one at home but myself and six little children, so I worked out the day alone, pretty nearly, with much fear and trembling and prayers to my God; and, as night came on I felt more and more troubled. While I was at the supper table with my family, I fell from the table, on my knees, wonderfully terrified with the thought that death would come and find me a sinner; so just then I prayed, "Have mercy on me, O thou Son of David!" and with these few, fervent, heartfelt words, the dear Savior spoke peace to a distressed and troubled heart. Just then he set my captive spirit free; and I was made to rejoice and feel happy in a Savior's love. I desired some one to help me rejoice in the God of my love; so my friends brought brother Samuel Driver, and he sang and prayed with me, and gave me encouragement on my way. I felt as though I had been removed from under a mountain's load. I lay down and enjoyed the sweetest sleep that I had for many nights. I felt perfectly safe in a Savior's love. I arose in the morning with the light, rejoicing in the Savior's love. Everything seemed to please God. It was the prettiest sun that ever shone over the earth; everything looked glad; the song of birds was so sweet; everything looked pleasant and happy.

Now, came my trial of faith. I had been, for months previous to my conversion, thinking of uniting myself with the Brethren. But I had not heard the Brethren preach since I was a child; yet through reading the Companion, and seeing different one's views on the scriptures, I became more enlightened, and thought that baptism by immersion was right. Also the above mentioned brother, gave me brother Nead's works to read,—of course as good instruction as one could have on our profession of faith, and for enlightening the mind in the teachings of the Scriptures. I found there was something more for me to do. I felt, then, that I must be baptized for the remission of sins, as our blessed Savior has taught us in his holy word. Brother D. came to visit me on the 7th evening, and told me if I wished to be baptized it could be done previous to his going away, as he expected to leave home on the 9th; he said it could be done on the morning before he would leave. I told him I would think over it until the time talked of, yet all the time feeling that the next day should be the time. So the next morning I arose from my bed and went about my work as usual, although I felt a sadness at heart, and still could feel more trouble coming on; and until we were ready for breakfast, I felt myself too much burdened to go to breakfast, until I went to my God in prayer, and asked him in much earnestness and faith to teach me what to do. I felt as though that was the Lord's appointed day, and no other day would be; so as soon as breakfast was over, I told my husband to go down and tell brother D. that I wanted to be baptized that day, which was the 8th day of May. He sent for a deacon, brother Hoover and wife, and I was baptized on the evening following. I felt satisfied that I had left some clouds behind me that had been overshadowing my pathway; so everything worked together for good to me, and, above all, was pleasing to the merciful Being. The next morning, the 9th, the time first proposed for baptism, the waters rose a considerable extent—too much for baptism to be administered. So, will not all Christian followers of the blessed Savior agree with me, that the Good Spirit was at work? I thank the good Lord to-day, that, while the Spirit was at work, I worked too. So by the help of a kind brother in the Lord, I was brought out of some deep trouble; and since then, I have been permitted, by the blessed Savior to enjoy two lovefeasts, one at Moscow, and one at New Hope, brick meeting-house. They were feasts of love, indeed, to my soul. I felt like exclaiming with the Psalmest David, "I will praise my God with a loud voice, and a joyful heart." I felt that we were doing what was the good and acceptable will of the Father and. I felt that it had been through the mercy and goodness of God that I had been brought out of a state of sin, and was permitted to enjoy such refreshing seasons to my soul. So I promised my God that I intended to live nearer unto him than I had. When I began to examine myself, I was not living as near my God as I could; I felt as though I loved everybody; I thought I would do all I could to render any one happy. I tried to pray as much as possible; and, whenever I could, I was trying to live a devoted Christian life.

Here comes another question, do I have family prayer? No; so it rested with a great deal of weight on my mind. I felt that it was one of the most important Christian duties. All day, the 6th of November, it pressed with a greater weight on my mind. The nearer night drew on, the more I felt that there was a great cross for me to take up, and something that must be done. So before my family retired to their beds, I read a chapter and prayed with them. I have been feeling better satisfied ever since. I am sure we will have to be cross-bearers, if we expect to be crown-wearers.

If we will only perform the duties devolving upon us, my dear sisters in the Lord, and then look on the right side of the page, the blessed Savior will make our lives all joy, peace, sunshine and happiness. We need never to despair. "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in the green pastures, by the still waters."

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
In a believer's ear."

By the prayers of the faithful, and the grace of God, I want to be steadfast. I am your unworthy sister in the Lord.

SALLIE A. BAILEY.

Swoope's Depot, Va.

MARRIED.

On the 9th of October, by Elder George Witwer, at his residence in Hamilton, Mo., Mr. Francis M. McBroyer and Miss Delia Jane Murrell, all of Daviess Co., Mo.

October 30th, by the same at his residence. Mr. Rellis Walker and Miss Caroline McCreary, all of Daviess Co., Mo.

By the undersigned, on the 26th day of October, Mr. Frederick J. Custer and Miss Martha Jane Good, both of Cambria county, Pa.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

By the undersigned, at his residence, Nov. 16, 1873, David R. Snider, of Martinsburg, Blair Co., Pa., to Rosanna Ebersole, of New Enterprise, Bedford Co., Pa.

S. A. MOORE.

At the residence of the bride's parents, on the 18th of Nov., 1873, by the undersigned, Mr. Jno. F. Teany, of Clarion Co., Pa., and Miss. Ellie Furgason, of Armstrong Co., Pa.

Also in Kittanning, on the 9th of Oct., 1873, by J. B. Uber, Mr. Jno. A Anthony, and Miss. Mollie E. Richard, both of Armstrong Co., Pa. J. P. HETRIC.

At the residence of the bride's parents, by John Anglemyer, Mr. Levi Chupp and Miss. Margaret Weaver, of Kosciusko Co., Ind.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Milledgeville congregation, Carroll Co., Ill., Nov. 1st, 1873, Ellen Nora Springer, infant daughter of brother George and sister Sarah Springer, aged 4 years and 30 days. Disease, diptheria. Funeral occasion improved by Elder J. S. Hauger and others, from Matth. 24th chapter, first part of the 44th verse to a large and attentive audience.

July 7th, 1873, in the Grundy County congregation, sister Mary Strickler, aged 80 years 11 months and 6 days. She was a consistent member of the church for fifty-five years. She leaves an aged husband, who has been a minister of the church for many years. Funeral discourse by the Brethren.

BENJAMIN BEEGHLY.

Peter James Layman was born Sept. 18th, 1872, and October 26th, 1873, aged one year, one month and eight days.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

In the Sandy congregation, Columbiana Co., Ohio, David Stuckey, son of brother David and sister Hannah Stuckey, deceased, aged 10 years, 8 months, and 5 days. Words of consolation by elder Lewis Glass and H. P. Borton, (Disciple,) From Matt. 24 : 44.

Brother John Weaver was born in the state of Maryland, June 30th, 1791, and died near North Georg-town, Columbiana Co., Ohio, Oct. 30th, 1873, aged 82 years and 4 months. Disease, Pleurisy. He leaves five children, thirty-five grandchildren, and fifteen great-grandchildren to mourn their loss. Funeral occasion improved by brethren Lewis Glass, Noah Longenecker, and John A. Clement.

In the Union Centre congregation, Nov. 8th, 1873, Samuel Stump, aged 22 years and 5 months. Disease, consumption.

Robert Irwin, infant son of brother Isaac and sister —— Secrist. was born Nov. 24th, 1872, and died July 29th, 1873, aged 8 months and 5 days. Funeral services by the undersigned, assisted by elder Levi Wells, from Philemon 15th, to an attentive congregation.

J. P. Hetric.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in the George's Creek branch, Fayette county, Pa., Sept. 10th, 1873, sister Sarah Fouch, widow of elder James Fouch, deceased, in the 96th year of her age. She was truly a mother in Israel, and a devoted, and faithful Christian, and a kind neighbor. On Wednesday, the 12th, her remains were deposited in the grave-yard at the Grove meeting-house, in the presence of a large concourse of relation and friends. The occasion was improved by brother John C. Johnson. Isaiah M. Fouch.

In the Chippewa congregation, Wayne Co. Ohio, Oct. 8th, 1873, brother Jacob Lehn' Funeral occasion improved by the Brethren.'

Also in the same congregation, Oct. 30th, two sons of friends John and Rebecca Flickinger: Albert, aged 12 years, 8 months and 7 days; and Anthony Lewis, aged 3 years, 1 month and 2 days. Disease, sore throat. They are laid in one grave. Funeral services by the writer.

In Stark county, Ohio, Oct 8th, 1873, sister Eliza, wife of Abraham Kitlinger, aged 63 years, 4 months and 7 days. Sister Kittinger was born in Lancaster county, Pa., and emigrated to Ohio in 1844. She has been a member of the church about fifteen years. She leaves a kind husband and five children to mourn their loss; but we hope it may be her eternal gain. Funeral services by J. B. Shoemaker and E. L. Yoder.

Of internal hemorrhage, in Moulton, Iowa,

Nov. 9th, 1873, Samuel, son of brother Aaron Harter, aged 25 years, 8 months and 11 days. Funeral services by the Brethren, from John 5: 25.

The subject of the above notice, was a young man of more than ordinary worth for industrious habits, amiability, and morality. He had few equals; and was respected by all who knew him. His remains were followed to their resting place by a large concourse of friends and relatives; and during the ceremonies of interment, there were few eyes present that were not bedewed with sympathetic tears. Like many others, he put off the preparation for eternity until confronted by the rider on the pale horse, who claimed him as his own, despite the skill of physicians, the struggles of the soul, and the tears of friends. His struggles with death were severe and protracted. When about to yield he exclaimed in the agony of his soul,

"Here, Lord, I give myself to Thee,
'Tis all that I can do!"

This is another solemn warning to all who neglect the day of salvation until the final moment. Oh that men would take heed to their ways! and honor the Lord by love-service before they are obliged to face the grim destroyer, when there is nothing left to offer but the fleeting breath.

On Nov. 12th, at the same place, Minnie May daughter of brother Aaron and sister Elizabeth Harter, aged 3 years and 5 months. Funeral services from Matt. 18: 2—5. The above was a granddaughter of elder Abraham and sister Barbara Replogle. Brother Aaron has been singularly unfortunate with his family; having had (if the writer is correctly informed) ten deaths, including mother of first wife. He has the sympathies of friends and neighbors.

G. B. Replogle.

In Fulton county, Ohio, sometime in Feb. 1873, Mrs. Hannah Vanfleet, aged 52 years, 5 months and 22 days. The deceased leaves a kind husband and family to mourn their loss. Funeral services by the writer to a large concourse of people.

In the bounds of the Swan Creek branch, Fulton county, Ohio, March 13th, 1873, sister Elizabeth Fashbaugh, aged 70 years 4 months and 13 days. Sister Fashbaugh was born in Bedford county, Pa. Her last illness was short—10 hours—when she fell asleep in Jesus. She has been a member in the church and in good standing for some 28 years. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. Her life has been honest, upright, kind and indulgent. Peace be to her ashes. Funeral services by the writer, followed by R. K. Berkeybile.

Also, in the same congregation, Sept. 18th, 1873, sister Mary Snyder, wife of brother Henry Snyder, aged 77 years 8 months 9 days. Sister Snyder has lived in holy wedlock for 58 years; has been a member of the church of the Brethren for a great many years; and has raised a large family of children, 10 in number. Two of her children preceded her in death; the rest are all living and consistent members of the church. Grandchildren, 63; great-grandchildren, 37. May the Lord bless the husband of our departed sister with strength from on high, that he may be able to bear up in his old days, as also the dear children. Funeral services by brother Abraham Stutsman and the writer.

Also, in the same congregation, of Spinal Fever, Hattie Ellen Henricks, daughter of brother John and sister Catharine Henricks, and grand-daughter of brother Noah and sister Catharine Henricks, aged 6 years 3 months and 26 days. Dear parents, weep not for your sainted daughter. Rest assured that you have a bright gem in the kingdom of glory. Funeral services by brother David Berkeybile and the writer, from the words, "Suffer little children to come" &c.

A. Berkeybile.

LIST OF MONEYS RECEIVED for SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS, etc.,

N Wilson	1 75	K me & Livengood	75
J A Studebaker	10	M S Benn	10
W A Kershner	75	Wm Roberts	40
Jacob Kepner	40	J E Pfautz	1 60
Isaiah M Fouch	10	S P Miller	50
Norman Faw	40	Wm Reist	2 00
A S Culp	20	C C Frantz	10
W A Bashor	40	Hannah Knouff	5 75
T Brownd	40	G Ashenbrenner	3 50
Eld J S Hanger	10	E Troxel	1 50
J Leiter	20	E Mayraw	1 25
J Y Beckler	2 00	Eld A Stumey	1 25
G Brubaker	75	M Newcomer	2 25
Levi Burd	75	John A Miller	10
Lewis M Kob	75	E W Stoner	1 00
T B Wentick	2 10	Wm B Jacobs	1 50
A C Kinny	10	B Hollinger	40
Simon Martin	1 25

WE will admit a limited number of selected advertisements at the following rates
One insertion, 20 cents a line.
Each subsequent insertion 15 cents a line.
Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.
No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations.

FAREWELL REMARKS, with a historical view of the establishment, growth &c. of the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION, PIOUS YOUTH and BRETHREN'S ALMANAC, by H. R. Holsinger, will be found in our Almanac for 1874.

TERMS: Single copy, postpaid, 10 cents; six copies, 40 cents; and twelve copies, 75 cents.

Undenominational but EVANGELICAL

International LESSONS! AGENTS WANTED. For samples, club rates, &c., address,

AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER. Fifth year. $1.50 per year. Single copy 15c.

BEST HELP for SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS and Officers published.

J. W. McIntyre, 4 South Fifth St. St. Louis.

TRAPPERS, &c.

How to trap, and fish, and tan furs. All for 50 cents. Address

WILLIAM DAILY.
Nimisilla,
9: 41—50. Summit Co., Ohio.

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS.

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.

EDW'D J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen.
York, Pa.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passengers Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:

MT. DALLAS ACCOM., at 7: 50 A. M.
HUNTINGDON EXPRESS, at 2: 55 P. M.

RETURNING.

EXPRESS, leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.

ACCOMMODATION, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. in time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c.

W. H. BROWN, SUPT.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE
By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.

This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works. "NIGHT SCENES," and "OUR FATHER'S HOUSE," nearly 100,000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. ZIEGLER & M'CURDY, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE
"SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS,

Manufactured by E. P. Needham & Son, 143, 145 & 147 East 23d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,

J. H. MOORE,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2.50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARICE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-tf.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary Word-for-word English Translation. By Benjamin Wilson. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. William Aikman, D. D. $1.50.

Man, in Genesis and in Geology; or, the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. Wells. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporaneous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Aims and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By George Combe. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structure and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid,	1.25
Per dozen " "	13 30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	6.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 00 per volume or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond, 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of Church Music Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1 25 per copy, postpaid, or $10 00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$2.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	2.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25

32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION. 25

Brethren's Encyclopedia.	$1.70
Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Mcomaw, prepaid,	.75
Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid,	.75
12 copies, by Express.	7.00
Pious Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid,	.45
Browns Pocket Concordance,	.60
German & English Testaments,	.75
Nead's Theology, Post Paid,	1.45
" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid	1.40
Companion Volume 3, bound post paid,	$2.7
Reserved at the office,	2.25

How to read Character. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco. To ministers on Tobacco, Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63, Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a spler did one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interst.

288 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. Tukesbury, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

DR. FAHRNEY'S

Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

A tonic and purge, for Blood Diseases. Great reputation. Many testimonials. Many ministering brethren use and recommend it. Ask or send for the "Health Messenger." Use only the "Panacea" prepared by

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,
431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

AND

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.
Waynesboro, Franklin Co. Pa.

Agents Wanted Everywhere.

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, DEC. 9, 1873. NUMBER 49.

For the COMPANION.

Solemnity of Death.

Is it not a solemn sight to look upon the pale face of a lifeless human being? Who can behold it without feelings of solemnity? Do you see that procession moving slowly toward the cemetery? What is the size of the coffin which you can see within the hearse? Perhaps it is a large one; and perhaps the last one which you saw was the smallest size, bearing away from the arms of some fond mother a darling little babe. Perhaps the next one which you see may be one of medium size, bearing away from the walks of life a blooming youth. Do you hear the solemn sound of the cemetery bell, while their bodies are being consigned to the tomb? Does it not tell us that we too must die? How long since they were filled with life and health, and their hopes of life and pleasure were as strong as ours? Only a short time—a few weeks, or, perhaps days. The question seems naturally to arise, how soon will I be summoned by the dread messenger who travels through the length and breadth of the land, sparing neither old or young, rich or poor—neither the noble nor the dejected, the beautiful or the deformed? A feeling of solemnity pervades our whole being. But we fix the time in the far distant future. How revolting to our natures is the thought of death! If we are prepared to meet our God in peace.

"Death is the gate to endless joys;
And yet we dread to enter there."

But when the good shepherd is ready to receive us, he knows full well how to bring us into resignation. He will lead us gently through fiery trials of affliction; perhaps take the loving little lambs from our arms to his bosom, or the dear companion from our side. We are made to feel that this world is all a lonely wilderness, and to sing,

"How long, dear Savior, oh! how long,
Have I on earth to stay?
Roll on, roll on, ye wheels of time,
And bring the joyful day."

But if we feel that we are unprepared to meet death, it seems natural for us to look upon it as being far in the future; and to delay making preparation till a more convenient season. Alas, how many are swept into eternity while waiting for a more convenient season!

Parents, did you ever witness the death of a sinner? Oh, how it excited your energies in bringing your children into the fold of Christ! I witnessed a scene on the tenth of October, one year ago, which impressed on my mind the great responsibility resting on parents. I wish every parent could be impressed with this, the most horrible scene which I ever beheld. It was the death of a young man who had made no preparation for the solemn change. His mother was a member of the church. She attended meetings and Sabbath-school, and took her daughter with her. She often asked her two sons to go with her, but they always refused. Their father was a wicked man. He seldom attended meeting. He allowed his sons to spend their time as they liked. Their Sabbaths were spent in reading novels, playing violins, &c. They were young and happy, and looked upon death as a light thing. But a few weeks before Willie was laid on his death bed, he and I were conversing on the subject of death. It made my blood run cold to hear the careless expressions which he used. He was perfectly confident that he would live to be old. I little thought of his dissolution being so near, but tried in the fear of God, to warn him of his danger. He soon fell sick, and lingered nearly three months. His poor mother, as she saw his danger, was in agony. She wept and prayed for him day and night, but was afraid to speak to him directly about death. She asked him if he did not want to get well, and if he could not pray to God to raise him to health. She did not allow any one to speak to him on the subject of death.

On the 8th of October, he was seen to be sinking very fast. A physician was called. He could give them no encouragement as to his condition. He asked the young man his prospects of heaven, and whether he could not cast his care on Jesus. He said, "Doctor, I am too wicked." He was not addressed again on the subject until one o'clock in the morning of the tenth. He was found to be speechless and dying. Oh! the agony of those parents cannot be described. That father had not prayed with and for his son all through his life. He had not seen the necessity of it. But I never heard such prayers escape the lips of human, as he prayed in that dreadful hour. He entered into a solemn covenant, to serve God the remainder of his life, and train his children for him, if he would only spare his darling Willie. But it was too late. It was not the first warning he had received. Two years before he had been warned by the death of a little son; but he had passed it by unheeded.

The parents and friends who were present gathered around the dying young man. Every breath was a prayer for him. He looked wildly from one to another. Such looks I hope never to behold again. He could not speak, but seemed to realize his condition! He was urged to pray, in answer to which he cast his eyes upward and uttered a soul-harrowing groan with every breath until he breathed his last.

Thus passed away a promising man. I do not say he was lost, the dying thief was forgiven, but there is danger in delaying for death-bed repentance. Is it not astonishing how easily we forget chastisement? How apt we are to seek the vain pleasures of this world, to drown our sorrows! How many in trying to stifle their convictions of sin, and their dread of death and the judgment, after a severe chastisement, launch far out on the sea of folly and fashion. While gliding smoothly on this beautiful sea, they embrace the doctrine of David's fool, who "saith in his heart, There is no God." They then are perfectly happy, and resolve to spend the remainder of their days on those pacific waters. But the good Lord who sees them drifting astray, sends a mighty storm, to remind them once more of their home.

Let me here illustrate by a circumstance which came under my observation a few years ago. It was the death of a young lady, the only child of wealthy parents. She was beautiful and accomplished; and upon her was lavished everything which she desired that money would buy. She did not set her affections on things of this world, as her parents did. She was a sweet, amiable, Christian girl. Although her father almost worshipped her, he did not believe in her God and religion, or rather pretended not to believe in them, and was anxious that she should make a fine display in the world, in which he much delighted. But she resisted with firmness, and was devoted to Christianity. When disease claimed her for its prey, she did not murmer, but seemed perfectly resigned. Three of the best physicians of the town were employed, but in vain. She lingered and suffered about three months, when it was evident that she must die. But her proud hearted father could not believe that his lovely daughter would be taken away from him. He had buried a little son himself, and had seen his neighbors bury their darling children, but he could not realize that death was no respecter of persons, until a few days before she died. He saw her condition, and then his greatest anxiety was, to know that she had faith in God. Most of his time was spent by her side, conversing with her on the subject of religion, often asking her if she was willing to die. She assured him she was, and entreated him to meet her in heaven. A few moments before she died, he said to her, "Daughter, are you still confident you are going to heaven?" She answered him with emphasis, "Yes, father, yes!"

Thus passed away sweet Mollie, the belle of Saulsburg. Who will try to imitate her life, that their death may be like hers?

> "How blest the righteous when he dies,
> When sinks a weary soul to rest!
> How mildly beam the closing eyes!
> How gently heaves the expiring breast!"

This proud hearted man was now humbled as a little child. He said he had doubted the reality of experimental religion, but could never doubt again. His wife soon joined the church and has since lived an humble Christian life; but the father has rather worshiped the remains of his child than the Savior. His whole heart is filled with pride in acts of honor to her memory. This is right to some degree; but it is certainly wrong in the sight of God, to see thousands of dollars worth of property laid away to moulder and ruin, because they were once owned by a poor, human being, who is now returning to dust. Would it not be more pleasing to him to see it used in sending his gospel to the heathen, or in relieving the suffering poor of our land?

If this man should give five dollars to the missionary cause, or ten towards building a church, he would look upon it as a large sum; but one hundred dollars for a coffin for his child, several hundred for a monument, one hundred for a life size likeness of her, five in a piano which is kept in memory of her, one hundred in a gold watch and chain, several hundred in other valuables, and a beautiful pony which is not allowed to be worked because it was hers—are consecrated to her memory cheerfully. I have often wondered if this poor man would ever be warned again until he is called to give an account of his stewardship. Doubtless he intends to prepare to meet his child in heaven, but is waiting for a more convenient season. Alas! this man is only one among many who spend their time and means for selfish purposes, while they would let Lazarus lie at the gate and beg for the crumbs which fall from their tables.

Now, my dear readers, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Religion never was designed
To make our pleasures less."
"'Tis religion that can give Peace and comfort while we live."
"'Tis religion that can give Solid comfort when we die."

"Kind souls, reflect awhile with me,
Upon your wretched state!
How frail our life, how short our time,
Our miseries how great!

How short the pleasures earth affords!
How transient and how few,
Compared with heaven's eternal joys,
And pleasures ever new!

Make the extended skies your tomb,
Let heaven record your worth;
For know, vain mortals, all must die,
As nature's sickliest birth.

Would bounteous heav'n indulge my prayer,
A nobler choice I'd frame
Than here to be esteemed great,
Or gain an earthly name.

But in thy book of life divine,
My God, inscribe my name;
There let it fill some humble place,
Beneath the slaughtered Lamb."

MARY M. TAYLOR.

Morrisonville, Ill.

Lonely Workers.

Many Christians have to endure the solitude of unnoticed labor; they are serving God in a way which is exceedingly useful, but not at all noticeable. How very sweet to many workers are those little corners of the newspapers and magazines which describe their labors and successes; yet some who are doing what God will think a great deal more of at the last, never saw their names in print. Yonder beloved brother is plodding away in a little country village; nobody knows anything about him, but he is bringing souls to God. Unknown to fame, the angels are acquainted with him, and a few precious ones whom he has led to Jesus, know him well. Perhaps yonder sister has a little class; now and then a little child ascends to heaven to report her success, and occasionally another comes into the church; but nobody thinks of her as a very remarkable worker; she is a flower that blooms almost unseen, but she is none the less fragrant. There is a Bible-woman; she is mentioned in the report as making so many visits a week, but nobody discovers all that she is doing for the poor and needy, and how many are saved in the Lord through her instrumentality. Hundreds of God's dear servants are serving him without the encouragement of man's approving eye, yet they are not alone—the Father is with them.

Never mind where you work; care more about how you work. Never mind who sees, if God approves. If He smiles, be content. We cannot be always sure when we are most useful. * * * It is not the acreage you sow; it is the multiplication which God gives to the seed, which will make us the harvest. You have less to do with being faithful. Your main comfort is that in your labor you are not alone, for God, the eternal One, who guides the marches of the stars, is with you.—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

The man who never failed is a myth. Such a one never lived, and is never likely to. All success is a series of efforts, in which, when closely viewed, are seen more or less failures. The mountain is apt to overshadow the hill, but the hill is a reality nevertheless. If you fail now and then, don't be discouraged. Bear in mind it is only the part and experience of every successful man.

An Unexplained Phenomenon: Or the Darkness over New England in 1780.

Concluded from page 758.

But lest this description may be considered exaggerated by the excitement engeudered by the immediate occurrence of this phenomenon, we here reproduce the strong language of Dr. Samuel Tenney, written in calm mood to the Historical Society five years subsequent to the scene he is describing; the language of a philosophic mind deeply impressed. He says: "The darkness of the following evening was probably as gross as ever has been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light. It wanted only palpability to render it as extraordinary as that which overspread Egypt in the days of Moses. And, as the darkness is not substantial, but a mere privation, the palpability ascribed to that by the sacred historian must have arisen from some peculiar affections of the atmosphere, perhaps an exceeding thick vapor that accompanied it. I could not help conceiving at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable shades, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete. A sheet of white paper held within a few inches of the eyes was equally invisible with the blackest velvet."

What was the cause of this darkness? Here the wisdom of New England was baffled. Newspaper men, who are generally regarded as competent to explain all passing events, gave up in despair, and said: "It is to be desired that curious and philosophical gentlemen would favor the public with a solution of this phenomenon. They said, "There was nothing terrible in it," but nevertheless nearly everybody was terrified. It was pronounced a lusus naturae, past the vulgar comprehension, and which it was requested that the Royal Society of England should be consulted to frame a solution. But this learned body never explained it. Dr. Tenney, in 1785, wrote the Historical Society that the ability of the land had endeavored to present a cause, but, said he, "You will agree with me that no satisfactory solution has appeared." In similar language wrote Noah Webster in 1843. The theory of some, that it was smoke and ashes from forest fires, extensively raging, is overturned by Dr. Webster, who argued that "no fires in our forests could have been sufficient to spread a dense cloud over all of New England and even some parts of the Middle States." He might have added: "And this in so short a time, when the swiftest clouds move but ten miles an hour." The theory of Webster himself, that it was the smoke of some volcano in the northern regions of this continent, wafted in a vast volume by the wind," is equally untenable. No great density of smoke was observable, and in Boston, as elsewhere, "there was," says a Bostonian, "not the least appearance of fog, smoke, or haziness."

The old poems declare that smoke from the burning of every town and forest in the land would not create so dismal a gloom. And all analogies teach they were right. The notion of some, that Venus or Mercury intercepted the sun's rays- is refuted by the fact that there was no transit of either of these planets during that year. Some said it was a solar eclipse—a conclusion rendered impossible by the moon's having fulled the day before. And very aptly does the astronomer of Paxton ask: "If the darkness of the day was caused by a solar eclipse, what then darkened the night, as the moon was more than forty hours' motion past her opposition?" Others said a comet interposed the baleful shadow of its nucleus between men and the sun, or flung its tail upon the earth. Dr. Tenney attributed the darkness to a substratum cloud of vapor of great thickness and density, the sun's rays getting lost in the struggle to penetrate the dusky shield. And Stearns regarded it as caused by exhaled particles of various qualities of matter highly condensed and impervious to sunlight. It is possible these views were borrowed from Dr. Thomas Burnet, the English geologist, who, more than a century earlier (in 1667), had written that in the "Latter Days," in accordance with our Lord's prediction, "The sun and moon will be darkened, or of a bloody hue or pale countenance, produced by an infectious and corrupt air, filled with thick vapors and fumes or turbid exhalations, atmospheric obscurities to a great extent intercepting the sun's rays, causing it thus to appear, and proportionably diminishing the light of the moon." (Vide Theory of the Earth.) To say the least, many of the views of the New Englanders coincided with those of Burnet respecting the modus operandi by which an unusual solar obscuration could take place. Far more likely is the view already hinted at, that the secondary cause was not at all in the body of the solar orb or in the earth, but of cosmical origin, and traceable to cometic or meteoric material consuming in the upper regions and falling in a great cloud into the atmosphere in the form of cosmic dust. The sooty and sulphurous smell in the air, the faint electrical flashes, and the black dust seen on the surface of water in many localities, favor this view. The cause was evidently cosmic, cometic, and celestial.

But while New England admitted a secondary cause, her Christian people, sharing the feeling of the devout and philosophical Stearns, imputed the flinging of this black shadow "like a funeral pall" over the land inhabited by nearly one-third of the people of the United Colonies, to the direct interposition of the God of the Universe, who himself, by means unknown to mortals, darkened both the sun and the moon, both the day and the night, as a token of his indignation against every prevailing iniquity, and an omen of a future day of universal destruction and wrath! It made no difference that it was not supernatural, or that secondary causes had produced the result witnessed. The effect only was sought for; the sacred Scriptures had announced a darkening of the sun and moon, and these signs had been fulfilled before their eyes—locally, to be sure—but so were all physical and moral signs. The gravest minds reverently went behind all secondary cause and declared it was the immediate hand of God. The ministry insisted it was occasioned by a divine arrangement of nature, and in the spirit of the sacred Hebrew writers, who ascribed all remarkable and accountable acts of the natural world to the working out of the vast designs of the Infinite, said: "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes!" In more modern times, men would doubtless have said: "Oh! it is only a temporary obscurity of the light by a cloud of exhaled vapor, or by terrestrial contact with cosmic particles, and nothing more." Few minds would see God in the mysterious cloud. Not sa with our fathers. They saw in the strange sun-darkening shrond a sure celestial token of the approaching consummation, and so proclaimed it in all ways. The impression was most profound, and was not effaced during the remainder of that century. The view was reiterated seventeen years later by the orthodox Spaulding in the pulpit of the Tabernacle at Salem, and was indorsed in the first religious paper in the world, published at Portsmouth in 1808. Indeed, it was opposed by none. To-day, nearly the entire body of believers, comprising the sect of Advent Christians in the United States and Canada, sustain the views of the New England Christians of the last century concerning the significance of the darkness of Friday, May 19, 1780. We argue nothing here pro or con., but only state facts, and should be unfaithful chroniclers of historical fact did we omit to record this abiding conviction of nearing Judgment on the old New England mind, and transmitted to hundreds of thousands of their posterity by the never-to-be-forgotten Dark Day.

We may learn lessons of good from these recollections of the famous Black Friday. Individually, the multitudes who live in 1871 may not feel that such old-time and far-off events, however ominous, at all concern them. Nevertheless, there was wisdom in the words, and a certain heroic principle in the conduct of Abraham Davenport, Colonel, and afterward Judge of Stamford, Conn., and State Counsellor in the Legislative Chamber at Hartford—a wisdom and a moral worth remembering. The providence of God found him serving his day and generation when the great darkness fell. Amid the deepening gloom that wrapped about the city, darkened the rooms of the State House, and set the law-givers to trembling and many of them to exclaim: "It is the Lord's Great Day," and move to adjourn, Davenport refused to be frightened from his post, but when all eyes turned to him, boldly said: "I am against the adjournment. Either the day of Judgment is at hand, or it is not. If it is not, there is no cause for adjournment. If it is, I wish to be found in the line of my duty. I wish candles to be brought." Men will lose nothing while in the true line of present duty. In the words of the poet Whittier in allusion to the scene we here describe: 'Simple duty hath no place for fear." The line of duty is the true path for all to walk in, come what may.—D. T. Taylor, in Boston Journal.

The Mind.

The mind is a nobler store-house than a coal-bin, a savings-bank, or even a casket for the most costly diamonds In the sight of those higher intelligences who can look into the secret of things,—who can see the prince's heart, though covered by a beggar's jacket,—in their sight, that which enlightens the mind, illuminates the understanding, expands the soul of a little pauper child, is of greater worth, of more importance, than that which fills the coffers, swells the purse, and fosters the vanity of the proudest millionaire.

Let us boast of our mineral wealth and thank a beneficent Creator for hiding in the earth such inexhaustible treasures of glittering stones and precious ores; but let us not forget that there are other sources of wealth—other mines whose working is essential to the good of society, the church and the State.

"Deeper, deeper let us toil,
In the mines of knowledge;
Nature's wealth and learning's spoil
Win from school and college:
Delve we there for richer gems
Than the stars of diadems."

J. Zick, Jr.

For the Companion.

Farewell to the Old Year.

The Old year is passing, and the New year will soon dawn upon us. Many of our friends, who are with us now, may be in the cold embrace of death by the time the New year comes in. Let us try to begin the New year with new hopes and resolutions, and strive to be better and nobler. When we look back to the past year, we may perhaps regret that we have not done many things that our conscience prompted us to do. But when the year is past, we can never recall angry words and cruel deeds that we wrought in the past year. Providence has been very kind to us during the present year; he has given us a year of plenty, and has spared our unprofitable lives, whilst many of our friends have been called away to a better world than this. But we are like the Old year, we must pass away.

I will also say a few words of the Companion. It has been a welcome visitor to our family during the present year. I have perused its valuable columns with great interest, and I consider it one of the best papers ever printed for family reading. I hope it will continue to be as interesting during the coming year. Many of the readers of the Companion are deprived of assembling at the house of God to worship; and to such persons the paper is doubly welcome; and it is appreciated more than by those persons that can attend church. We hope that some of the good writers who have remained silent so long will resume their pens, and let us receive such articles as are intended to benefit all of us that read the Companion. I will say in conclusion that we are sorry to hear that we are about to lose our much esteemed editor; but we hope all parties concerned are satisfied. From your friend

Minnie Roelkey.

New Market, Md.

The Torn Bible.—About the only family quarrel of which we have heard, that turned out well, is that of which a pastor tells. He went into a house and saw a Bible on the table, and said, "What a pity that this Bible should be so torn! You do not seem to take much care of it. Half the leaves are gone." The man answered, "This was my mother's Bible, and my brother John wanted it, and I wanted it, and we could not agree about the matter, and so we each took a half. My half has been blessed to my soul, and his half has been blessed to his soul. And now we are both saved and love each other very tenderly."

"He had power over the angel, and prevailed." He is a strong man, indeed, who overmatched heaven's strength, and the Holy One of Israel, the stronger Lord; which is done by a secret supply of Divine strength within, wherewith the weakest, being strengthened, overcome and conquer. It shall be a great victory to blow out the flames of that furnace you are now in with the breath of faith; and when hell, men, malice, cruelty, falsehood, devils, the seeming frowns of a sweet Lord in the dark, which is your only victory, your enemies, that are but pieces of malicious clay, shall die as men, and be confounded.—Rutherford.

For the Companion.

Closer Than a Brother. (6s & 4s.)

Closer, my Savior, thou,
My song in death,
Swell now with grateful praise
My latest breath.
Savior, I come to thee;
Thy blood shall make me free,
I come to thee.

Though scarlet be the stream,—
Red current flow,—
Oh! wash my sins away,
Make them like snow.
Jesus, I come to thee;
Thy blood, it cleanseth me.
Come close to me.

Sheddeth the Lamb of God
A crimson pool
Of blood, to wash and make
Me white as wool?
My Shepherd heareth me,
He beckons unto thee,
"Come thou to me."

Now let my song of joy
Exultant rise,
Angelic harmonies
Surging the skies.
Oh! lead me close to thee,
So that by faith I see
Thou lovest me.

Bright from the Eden shore,
Celestial ray,
Hope, gleaming in a star,
Bear me away.
So would I long to be Closer yet unto thee
Ever with thee.

Depth of infinite love,
Hope in the cross,
Life in eternal day,
Gold without dross,
Closer I cling to thee;
Do thou abide with me,
And I in thee?

P. H. Beaver.

Montandon, Pa.

Selected by Silas Thomas.

Pride.

And now abideth pride, fashion, extravagance, these three; but the greatest of these is pride—simply because it is the root of the whole matter. Destroy the root and the tree will die. It is hardly worth while to waste ammunition in shooting at fashion and extravagance as long as the root is alive. Most persons say it does not matter how people dress, pride is in the heart. Very true, but straws show which way the wind blows. A plain exterior may cover a proud heart; but depend upon it, a fashionable exterior seldom, if ever, covers a plain heart. Some rules work two ways, and some will not. A lady once asked a minister whether a person might not be fond of dress and ornaments without being proud. He replied: "When you see the fox's tail peeping out of the hole you may be sure the fox is within." Jewelry, and costly and fashionable clothing, may all be innocent things in their places, but when hung upon a human form they give conclusive evidence of a proud heart.

But is it possible that a man can be found at this advanced age of refinement that dares to speak or write a word against pride and its consequences? The large majority of that class of men died and were handsomely buried some time ago. Now, the pulpits have nearly all shut down on that style of preaching. The fact is we have passed that age, and are living in better times. Our fathers and mothers were far behind the times. They were good enough in their way, but dear me, they would not do now. They wore plain clothes, worshipped in plain churches and sung old-fashioned hymns. They talked and acted like some old pilgrims that were going to a better country; and when they left the world they stuck to it to the very last, that they were going to a city where there is no night. And it is my deliberate opinion that a vast majority of them went just where they said they were going.

But they are nearly all out of the way now, and the people have a mind to try a different route. We can be Christians now and do as we like. Yes indeed. We have fine churches, cushioned seats, costly carpets, a fashionable preacher, and have all our fiddling and singing done to order. Why, in some of our modern churches the majority of the choir are not even members of the church; and they do sing so sweetly—perfectly delightful. The music rolls over the heads of the congregation like the sound of many waters. Not a word can be heard, but the sound is glorious. Sometimes one sings all alone for a little while, then two and pretty soon the whole choir will chime in, until the whole house is filled with the most transporting sound. Now if this is not singing with the spirit and with the understanding also, then what is? that's the question. I know it is a little risky at this day to speak out against pride, because the church is full of it. It is no use to deny it. And hundreds who occupy the pulpit, whose duty it is to point out these evils plainly, are like dumb dogs; they don't even bark at it. They just let it go, and go it does, with a vengeance. And in proportion as pride gains in the church, spiritual power dies out. They will not, cannot dwell together, for they are eternal opposites.

It is a sin and a shame for men and women professing Christianity to spend money the way they do to gratify a proud heart when ten out of every twelve of the human race are yet unsaved, and eight out of every twelve have not as much as heard the gospel of Christ. There are many evils in the land and in the church, but I doubt if any evil is doing more harm than pride. It has stolen into the church by degrees, and now rules with a rod of iron. Churches that were once noted for plainness, and whose law still stands against pride and fashion, are practically powerless on the subject. It seems that nearly all creation is kept busy in furnishing fashions enough to satisfy the cravings of the depraved heart. An old Scotch preacher is reported to have said in a sermon at Aberdeen, "Ye people of Aberdeen get your fashions from Glasgow, and Glasgow from Edinburg, and Edinburg from London, and London from Paris, and Paris from the devil." Now I cannot say that we get our fashions by that route, but I am tolerably certain they originate from the same headquarters.

The religion of Christ is pure, peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, and full of mercy. All Christians are baptized with one spirit, into one body. They mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Their highest ambition is to honor God with all they have and are. They are not puffed up, not conformed to this world, but transformed by the renewing of their minds. There is no such thing in heaven nor earth as a proud Christian, there never was, nor ever can be. Pride is of the devil—it originated with him, and he is managing it most successfully in destroying souls.

But who is to blame for this state of things in the church? First and mostly, the pulpit is to blame. Men who profess to be called of God to lead the people to heaven, have ceased to rebuke this soul-destroying, heaven-provoking spirit. But why? First for a living, then for popularity. Esau sold his birth-right for a dinner of greens. That was a costly morsel for him. But now men sell out "cheap for cash or produce." Churches that were once powerful for good are now well nigh lost in forms and fashions. We may shut our eyes and wink and whine, and cry old fogy, and grandfather, and Moses and Aaron, and all that, but the fact is before us, pride, fashion and extravagance are eating the very life out of many of the heretofore best congregations in the land. The world is running crazy. The rich lead the way, because they can, while the poor strain every nerve to keep in sight, and the devil laughs to see them push on. Pride thrust Nebuchadnezzar out of men's society, Saul out of his kingdom, Adam out of Paradise, and Lucifer out of heaven." And it will shut many more out of Heaven, who are now prominent in the church. Neither death nor the grave will change the moral character of any one. The same spirit that controlled in life will cling to the soul in death, and enter with it into eternity. The angels of God would shrink from the society of many a fashionable Christian of this day. A few such souls in Heaven would ruin everything. Among the first things they would propose, would be a change of fashion. These pure white robes that the saints wear would not suit their taste at all. In life they care little about Christ and spiritual things, and they would care no more for them in Heaven than on earth. If there were two Heavens, one where Jesus is all in all, and the other with a Paris in it, I presume the road to the Paris heaven would be crowded with fashionable Christians. "Ma," said a little girl, "if I should die and go to Heaven, should I wear my moire antique dress?" "No, my dear, we can scarcely suppose we shall wear the same attire of this world in the next." "Then tell me, ma, how the angels would know I belonged to the best society?" In the views of that little girl we have illustrated the spirit of many a would-be-Christian of this day. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." —Bishop Weaver.

A Serious Subject.

Never laugh at religion. Never make a jest of sacred things. Never mock those who are serious and in earnest about their souls. The time may come when you will count those happy whom you laughed at—a time when your laughter will be turned into heaviness. Whatever you please to laugh at, don't laugh at religion.

Contempt of holy things is the high road to infidelity. Once let a man begin to make a jest and joke of any part of Christianity, and I am never surprised to hear that he has turned out a right-down unbeliever.

Have you really made up your mind to this? Have you fairly looked into the gulf which is before you, if you persist in despising religion? Call to mind the words of David: "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God." The fool, and none but the fool! He has said it, but he has never proved it! Remember, if ever there was a book which has been proved true from beginning to end, by every kind of evidence, that book is the Bible. It has defied the attacks of all enemies and fault-finders. "The word of the Lord is indeed tried." It has been tried in every way, and the more evidently has it been shown to be the very handiwork of God himself.

Matthew Henry tells a story of a great state man in Queen Elizabeth's time, who retired from public life in his latter days, and gave himself up to serious thought. His former gay companions came to visit him, and told him he was becoming melancholy. "No," he replied, "I am serious; for all are serious round about me. God is serious in observing us. Christ is serious in interceding for us, the truths of God are serious, our spiritual enemies are serious in their endeavors to ruin us, and why, then, should not you and I be serious too?" Don't laugh at religion!—Presbyterian.

For the Companion.

Symbols.

An audible confession of sin, and an audible promise to avoid it, when the manner of expression does not betray insincerity, is the best index of genuine repentance that can be known by men of one another. Both words and countenances may, however, possibly be false indexes of men's hearts. Thus they may have the proper words, and many other proper externals, and yet deceive one another and themselves. But God they cannot deceive, because he always knows the heart. Therefore, externals are both signs and realities only when the heart is right.

A real visible immersion of a believer in Christ, in the water, in the name of Christ, is as signally and as really the initiation of a new creature into the world. In both cases the creature may be a dead one; or, if alive, it may soon die. In both cases action is the sign of life. In both cases inaction is the sign of death. Baptism is therefore both a sign and a thing signified.

A man who girds himself, and stoops to wash his brother's feet, is as humble as Jesus was when he did it, as far as the sign goes. But there is an inexorable correlation between the sign and the thing signified. The ordinance of feet-washing generates and diffuses in every direction a spiritual atmosphere, which finds its way, backward and forward, into every side, every nook, and every corner of men's conduct, and women's, too.

Kisses are symbols too. There are only two kinds, the holy and the unholy. There are many persons who seem to think there is but little difference between the holiness and the unholiness of kisses. Others seem to think the difference so great that men are unable to salute one another with a holy kiss, and rest with a conclusion to omit it altogether, like the man who buried his talent.

The man who eats of the bread and drinks of the wine, that have been set apart to be emblems of the body and blood of Christ, does it significantly and really when he knows what the Lord's body and blood is; and this he knows when he carries about in himself a store of nourishment for helpless souls around him.

Those who participate in eating the meal which is said to be a fac simile, i. e., an exact imitation in matter and spirit of the one that Christ ate with his disciples in the night of his betrayal, are affected by it religiously, only in relation to their spiritual conditions. Judas participated in it and afterwards did what he did because there was a devil in him. Peter shortly afterwards denied his Lord and Master with a curse, because he was yet a very weak babe in the kingdom of Christ; and, but for the timely nourishment he received, he would very soon have died. Therefore the symbols must be right and rightly observed, and the heart must also be right.

The fact that the minds of some people are superstitiously fixed upon external deeds, does not by any means obliterate external righteous acts. Actions are men's fruits now just as much as ever they were, and in kind and quality they are just the same as ever they were. When a man prays he does right, and is right, if he prays right and his heart is right; but if he does not pray, (unless there be impediments in his speech,) audibly, (except with respect to somebody that can't hear,) and thinks ever so much about being good and doing good, his faith is dead.

Z. B. Garver.

Mt. Union, Pa.

If you want to annoy, and puzzle, and baffle a man full of trick and duplicity, you have only to practice a straightforword and simple integrity.

If you would have your laws obeyed, without mutiny, see well to it that they are pieces of God's law,—otherwise not all the artillery in the world can keep down mutiny.—Carlyle.

We are more likely to lose our comforts from want of love and gratitude, than from want of gifts and wisdom.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Dec. 9, 1873.

The Second-hand, and the Direct Knowledge of God.

"I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." Job 42: 5, 6.

This language expresses Job's knowledge of God when he was in all probability near his latter end, and after he had passed through a discipline, which in point of suffering and variety, few of our race have ever endured. This discipline consisted in a series of personal and domestic afflictions with which Satan was permitted to afflict this servant of God. Though living, perhaps, not less than fifteen centuries before the introduction of Christianity into the world, his trials and their effects harmonize beautifully with the experience of Christians as given in the following language of Peter: "Wherein (that is in hope of their finished and full salvation in the last times) ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations: that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." 1 Peter 1: 6, 7. The trial of his faith was indeed precious, and he passed through the ordeal triumphantly, and came out a purer, an humbler, and a wiser man, —wiser in that saving knowledge which is said to consist in the knowledge of the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he sent. John 17: 3.

It is with his knowledge of God which he obtained in his afflictions and bereavements, that we now have to do. We wish to look at Job's knowledge of God as an illustration of the knowledge of him we are to have to make that knowledge a source of joy and hope.

There is implied in this expressive language of the patriarch, an historical and experimental—a second-hand and direct knowledge of God. "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear." He had heard much said by people among themselves, and to him about God. His three friends, Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar, had no doubt said many things about God to him, as had Elihu. And it is altogether likely that he had pious parents; and if so, he had heard much of God in his childhood. Such historical or second-hand knowledge of God is very common. Those great teachers, the Bible and nature, impart an extensive knowledge of God "There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world." Ps. 19: 3, 4. This knowledge of God is very extensive. It is not confined to Christendom, but abounds in other lands. A large number of the inhabitants of the world who have arrived at that age which renders them susceptible of knowledge, have heard something about God and his character. In our own age and country much is said about God. A great many persons are professionally engaged in the work of spreading the knowledge of God. In the family, in conversation with friends, and especially in the sanctuary, we have heard of him by the hearing of the ear. Much is said of God in science and politics, as well as in religion. Our literature has much to say of God. This historical, second-hand, or theological knowledge of God prevails extensively in the world.

And though this knowledge of God that we have been considering is useful as an introduction or preparatory step to something that is higher and better; it may be a stimulant to our mental powers to strengthen them; it may open scenes of wonder to the mind upon which the imagination may revel in a certain kind of pleasure; and it may have some restraints upon vice. But there is no true godliness in it. It has no regenerating power upon the heart; no transforming power upon the life as is proven from the fact that thousands who have this knowledge are neither pious nor moral. Its influence upon the soul is like the influence of the sun on the earth in winter, cold and unproductive, and not like the sun in spring and summer, warm and quickening.

But Job in his affliction obtained a higher, a more thorough, a direct, an experimental knowledge of God. "Now mine eye seeth thee." This is the expression of a soul in close contact with God,—in conscious communion with him. The Almighty came within range of Job's moral vision. He saw him with his eyes, and heard him speak with his own ears, and did not now only hear others speak of him. The spirituality of the Eternal touched the spiritual nature of Job, and quickened it into new life, and that new life assumed a character that assimilated it to the life of God, and made it the eternal life of divine revelation. This event in the life of the aged patriarch was a spiritual resurrection, a renewing of the spirit of his mind, a new birth, proving that a man can be born again when he is old. What Job saw was no doubt the common symbol of the divine presence; the pillar of a cloud which accompanied the whirlwind, and which appeared to the Israelites in the wilderness, and when worshipping in the temple, was a symbol of the divine presence. This symbol was used in the transfiguration. While Jesus was speaking to his disciples, "a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud." Job probably saw the cloudy pillar with his eyes, and at the same time there was an overwhelming and joyful sense of the divine presence felt within his spirit, which most effectually humbled him. We see from this incident in the history of Job as well as from the experience of the truly pious, that there is a direct, conscious, and experimental manifestation of God to the spiritual nature of man, and that this manifestation constitutes the saving knowledge of God.

With this direct and experimental knowledge of God a new life manifests itself. All pride is subdued. There seemed occasionally before in Job some things that were not commendable. He seemed to treat his friends at times with disdain. On one occasion he said to them, "Ye are wise men, and wisdom will die with you; but I have understanding as well as you." But with the knowledge of God that he now possesses, how completely is he humbled as his own language shows: "I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." Man, in conscious nearness with God has ever felt this. Isaiah, John, Peter and others as well as Job have felt this.

This direct and experimental knowledge of God which Job now possessed, did not only humble himself but it exalted God in his estimation. He acknowledges the divine omnipotence and omniscience while he confesses his own weakness and unworthiness. "I know" said he "that thou canst do everything, and that no thought can be withholden from thee." His faith in and familiarity with God are farther shown in the following language: Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak; I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me." Instead of, I will demand of thee, a better reading is, I will ask of thee, and do thou instruct me. This language implies that he would seek instruction of God, that he might know and do his will. This direct and experimental knowledge is controlling and influential, bringing us into submission to the will of God, and into submission to his law.

Reader, hast thou this direct and experimental knowledge of God? Is he revealed to thy inner consciousness? Dost thou talk familiarly with him as did Moses, and walk with him as did Enoch? And does thy knowledge of him humble thee, and impress thee with his omnipotence and knowledge, and induce thee to confide in his instruction, as did Job's? Rest not in a second-hand knowledge of God. The faith that overcomes mountains and the hope that triumphs over death, must have this higher and personal knowledge of God for their basis. J. Q.

Editorial Correspondence.

Friday, 14th. Brother Peter went with us to the printing offices, and other business places, after which we departed. Cawker City is a promising town, and is finely located. Dined at Osbourn, having failed to find sister Morrow, who, we were told, resided about two miles east of said town. Thence we set out again for Russell county. Lodged at a small hut, with a family by the name of DeJean. They keep the postoffice, called Covert. Some time ago an Indian killed a man by the name of Covert, near a Creek which has two forks. So the one fork was called Indian, the second Kill, and the third Covert—"Indian kill Covert." We have still about twenty-eight miles to our destination.

Saturday, 15th. Set out upon our journey early in the morning. Passed over a very bluffy country, most of the time on the summit, so that we had a good view. The weather was only a little too warm to be entirely pleasant in the middle of the day, but the morning and evening were charming. Took our dinner by the wayside, on the banks of the Saline river. The water tastes somewhat salty, but can be drank where one has no other to rinse his dinner down.

We came in sight of the town of Russell; then turned eastward toward Bunker Hill, which we reached just at nightfall. We stopped only to inquire the way. Thence southeastwardly to our destination, at the house of friend Joseph Winebrenner, whom we used to know at Martinsburg, but had not seen for twenty-five years. They very kindly received us, and refreshed us, after a weary journey. The family consists only of himself and wife, the children having left to try the world for themselves. We also spent Sunday, 16th, with them, and are under obligations to Mr. and Mrs. Winebrenner for kindness and courtesies. We only had a Sabbath day's visit to this place, and so we could not very closely interview it. But what we did see, made a favorable impression upon our mind. There is beautiful prairie land for farming purposes; excellent rock for building, and an abundance of coal for fuel, and, we stake our reputation as a geologist, that other valuable minerals also abound. The country is recommended to us as very healthy. There are several brethren living in this neighborhood, but we did not get to visit them. We met brother Himes at his house, when inquiring the way, and learned that he was a brother, and was formerly from Cumberland Co., Pa. We are only making a raid into this country, to spy out the land, and cannot remain long enough at any place to fill any appointments, nor even to pay ministerial visits. We are upon our own expense, and visiting costs us the same as traveling, except the entertainment part.

Monday, 17th. This morning we set out for the return to Nebraska, hoping to reach Fairmont by Friday.

Thence we expect to visit Hastings and the neighborhood of Kearney Junction, Nebraska, and perhaps Ashland, Nebraska, and then return homeward, where we hope to land by December the fifteenth.

Have not seen a copy of the C. F. C. for the 11th, but suppose of course it is all right. We are still in good health.

Monday 17th. We had an unfavorable day for traveling, windy and cold. Dined near Lincoln Centre, kindly furnished us by Mrs. Winebrenner. Lincoln Centre is the county seat of Lincoln county, and is a small and dreary looking town on the Saline River. Thence over the Blue Hills, to a Mr. Watson's, where we lodged. Comparing our accommodations here with those to which we had been accustomed heretofore, there is quite a contrast. Our hotel is what is known here as a "Dug Out." That is, a hole dug out by the hill, and covered over with large logs, brush and ground. Large, flat rock paved the floor, and a big chimney warmed the room, and made it quite comfortable. The family was kind, and favored us with their best, which was biscuit, butter, pork—which we left for them—and corn coffee.

Tuesday 18th. Took an early start, and were enabled to dine at Beloit, Mitchell county, on what we had left of yesterday. Lodged with a family in Jewell county, about eight miles east of Jewell City. This was the hardest place we had yet stopped at. We think people would be justifiable in refusing to entertain travelers—except in extreme cases—when they can afford no better accommodations. Biscuit, butter, tomato-butter, and water, composed our supper and breakfast, with plenty of dirt for condiment. The day was very unpleasant, cold and stormy.

Wednesday 19. Dined at Scandinavia, in Republic county, on the Republican River. Pretty fair meal for thirty-five cents each. Here we crossed the river on a bridge, for which we paid twenty-five cents. Our purse is getting very low, of which fact we wish our delinquent patrons to make a note. If that registered letter from brother Beer, does not reach us at Carlton, we will be obliged to get a job before we can go farther.

We are now lodging at another "Dug Out," about two miles from the Nebraska line, near the east and west centre of Republic county. We had resolved to have better quarters, but night overtook us with nothing better in prospect. We had no choice. If people would only be cleanly and tidy, we could bear with their poverty. But we know of no excuse for filthiness—unless it be ignorance. And for the nasty stench of tobacco smoke we also know no other excuse. Surely no person of information and refinement would pollute the air for his family and guests in the manner our host is inflicting upon us. We have not inquired their name, but from the conversation we are overhearing, we observe that they are from New York, Wisconsin, &c. Pork and biscuit are the leading articles of diet. We also had potatoes and eggs, but all saturated with the essence of scrofula, so that I was obliged to sup on cake dipped in the yolk of egg. Not a bit of butter. Tea, but no sugar. Nevertheless, we expect to survive. Sister Susan Reber, and a few other Marthas, whom we have had to reprove for their over-carefulness, may make a note of these jottings.

To-morrow evening we hope to return to our cousins' in Filmore county. To-day was very fair. We are enjoying reasonable health.

Thursday, 20th. Breakfast was even poorer than supper. The biscuit was yellow with soda—not fit to be eaten at all. We managed to choke down the upper crust of one, spread with sorghum molasses, which, with a couple of boiled potatoes, and a cup of bad tea without sugar, formed our breakfast. The weather was more favorable. Dined at Hebron, county seat of Thayer county, Nebraska, on crackers and cheese, because our purse was getting too light to enjoy better luxuries. But it was better and more wholesome than the last day's diet. Reached cousin Simon Holsinger's about sunset, and Alexander's soon after, where we lodged. At Carlton we received a reinforcement of $25 from brother Beer. Thanks for promptness. And so closed our Kansas visit. Well, "what do you think of Kansas?" May be the mental interrogation of some of our readers, and for their satisfaction we will give a brief summary. The counties through which we passed, namely, Jewell, Osborne, Russell, Ellsworth, Lincoln, Mitchell and Republic, are a little too broken to make a first class farming country. Some river bottoms are very beautiful and wide, but the high prairie is very rolling and broken. True, they all have some high land which is level enough to make good farms, but not in such large tracts as may be found in Nebraska. To make up for this deficiency, they have excellent rock for building purposes. We saw some very fine houses built of the Magnecia Lime rock, in Cawker City. This stone can be dressed like marble, but is softer than marble. We saw a printer's imposing stone made of it. It is found in great abundance and it is very easily quarried. Russell county has also coal, and we think undoubtedly iron and other minerals. The citizens all assured us that the country is very healthy, and the soil productive. Last season was extraordinarily dry, and consequently the crop was not a full one. Timber is scarce, though all the water courses have more or less of the scrubby stuff that can be used for fire wood. Water may be obtained in abundance, at from twenty-five to one hundred feet. But the streams are nearly all dried up. We never knew a country that can get up as many rivers and creeks with as little water. The Saline and Smoky Hill combined have scarcely water enough, (at the places we crossed them) to drive a good grist mill. The Republican river has plenty of water, but it is muddy. The little Blue, is a beautiful stream of clear water. There are, no doubt, many excellent opportunities in Kansas, for persons who have a little money, and pluck and enterprise enough to leave the place of their nativity, and endure for a few years, the privations of a new country. The reasons for having some means to take with them will hereafter be more fully explained.

Friday, 21st. Brother and sister Alexander Holsinger accompanied us to Fairmount, about eighteen miles distant. Fairmount is a promising town, on the Burlington and Missouri River R. R., in Filmore county. We like Filmore county very much. It embraces a very beautiful farming country. Land can be had, of the B. & M. R. R. Co., at from three to ten dollars an acre, with ten years time to pay, at six per cent. interest, no part of the principal payable for four years. We regard this offer as an excellent opportunity to obtain a good farm, upon terms within the means of any man who could pay for one at all. And there are millions of acres of these lands still for sale along the line of said road.

In the evening took the train for Hastings, where we landed shortly before eight o'clock. Put up at the Denver House, where we are being comfortably entertained, at our own expense of course.

Saturday, 22d. Last night was the most unpleasant night of our trip. We had a very severe chill and felt quite unwell all night. Very feverish, and wild and fearful dreams. Dreamed our daughter Annie had died, and woke with bitter weeping, and eyes streaming with tears. Oh, what a bitter agony! May the good Lord preserve us from such a reality. Arose with a headache. The morning was wet and chilly. Mr. C. B. Neilson, Agent for the B. & M. R. R. Co., took us on his wagon to interview the lands surrounding the town, but owing to the unfavorable weather, and our ill health, we soon returned.

The day is now over, and a very gloomy one it was. We could not even take a fair view of the town. Visited most of the business houses, including the printing office, and found them generally busy. It is indeed surprising how rapidly this town has sprung up. Just one year ago the town was laid out. There was not a house in it then. Now there are some twenty business places, and about one thousand inhabitants. It is situated at the Junction of the B. and M. and Denver City and St. Joseph railroads, and is destined to become one of the most important towns in Nebraska. Lots are selling at from fifty to three hundred dollars. On Monday, if the Lord will, and if the weather be more favorable, we hope to farther interview the country.

Sunday, 23rd. Last night and to-day we had an opportunity of reading C. F. C. No. 45, which we received at Carlton. L. A. Dosch makes a good thing of "Do Not." Do not fail to read it. We believe we published an article several years ago, under the heading "Do." We agree with B. A. Stoner upon the subject of "Evil Speaking." Let us combine these two essays and say: "Brethren, do not speak evil one of another." Our assistant gives way to a poetical inspiration upon the "Suffering Savior," which brings that subject forcibly to one's mind. "Outward Signs," according to J. W. Wilt, are not too much to be depended upon. Perhaps he thinks as Paul did: "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed to the RENEWING of your MINDS." So we argue also; but then when the mind has been renewed, it will bring forth a non conformity to this world, or the fruits of the Spirit. Andrew Stalnaker closes his series of articles upon the subject of Baptism. His arguments are clear. Jas. Y. Heckler portrays Christendom to the life. We desire to be recognized among the "few," who do not wear the "Crown of Pride," of which Noah B. Blough gives a word of warning. The selections are all good and interesting, and we hope they will be considered.

Brother Sayler gives a number of quotations in favor of Capital Punishment, from the Old Testament, which he accompanies with such remarks that will lead the reader to infer that he favors the murdering of a murderer, by civil authority and forum. Now it may be that we are mistaken upon this subject, but we have always revolted at the presentation of the idea of taking persons, and, deliberately, and in cold blood, taking their life from them by any of the cruel devices which men have adopted, under the name or system of Christianity. We know it was sanctioned by the Mosaic dispensation, and that not only for murder, but as well for smiting or cursing father and mother, stealing men, being a witch, adultery, and many other misdemeanors. We might also quote many passages from the law of Moses, in favor of war, which to the Christian is horrible cruelty; in favor of divorce and re marriage, which to the Christian is fornication and adultery. But God is not a barbarian though he should tolerate the barbarian. If he were to adhere to the principles of the Mosaic dispensation, the Lord could never recognize the spirit of the Gospel. Or as Paul says: "Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance?" "God forbid, for then how shall God judge the world?" In a Christian point of view we must denounce life taking, whether it be by personal violence, or legalized system, in single contest, or wholesale strife. "Vengeance belongeth unto the Lord." He will reward by casting all evil-doers "into the lake which burns with fire and brimstone." But it may be that we are influenced by our sympathies more than by correct scriptural knowledge, for we would surely not suffer any of our Christian brethren to execute the Death Penalty, and do not like to have them even favor its being done. Perhaps the discussion of this subject may help us to get correct views upon it; but let us not cut each other to pieces while we interchange our opinions, lest we ourselves become worthy of execution, by having a mill stone tied to our necks and be cast into the sea.

We read with interest the remarks by brother Beachly to the Brethren's Sunday-school, at Dale City. Brother B. has been a faithful worker in our school, and if every private member would have discharged his duty as he did, and every officer would have done proportionately better, the school would be a hundred-fold more prosperous than it is. Hope all may infuse new zeal, and apply their powers to push forward the good work.

Brother Balsbaugh makes quite an important correction in his sixth paragraph. We hesitated when we read the sentence, "He is the man of the Lord's hosts." We understand the corrected reading. The seventh paragraph we commend to the careful, prayerful perusal and meditation of every member of our beloved brotherhood. The church is evidently in a state of transition. Great commotions are shaking it from centre to circumference. "How to grapple with these grave difficulties," to conciliate the conflicting elements, should be the one, grand, controlling object, of all corporate and individual endeavor. O brethren and sisters! let this be the one thing which we do.

We attended services, at the schoolhouse, and listened to the reading of a discourse by a Baptist minister, from John 3: 3. It was a pretty fair sermon, and cost somebody no little mental application. The remainder of the day was applied in writing these notes, and scriptural and other readings.

We announce our safe arrival home, in advance of the time expected. At Chicago we received news from wife's parents which caused us to hasten home. We arrived at 2 o'clock on Monday morning, 1st inst. Found our family well; but met the sad intelligence that wife's mother, Mrs. NANCY SHOOP, wife of Peter Shoop, had already been buried a week, a sorrowful stroke to sister Holsinger.

Since our return we have also attended the funerals of sister FLICKINGER, widow of brother Samuel Flickinger, deceased about six months ago; and of sister SAYLOR, wife of John J. Saylor. Particulars in our next, and also a more extended report of our return.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Peculiarities.

Brethren Editors:

Under the head of Peculiarities I noticed a few articles, and also when a sister said, "Being more exacting than the gospel we retard the Lord's cause." At that time I did not see what they meant, until I saw an article by a brother opposing christian uniform, in which he says it was our peculiarities that defeated us in the Maine Mission.

Many of our brethren wear a certain cut of clothes, and broad-brimmed hats, and have a certain way to comb the hair. If this is one of the peculiarities, I would refer such as object to it to John the Baptist, Luke 1: 76,77: "And thou child, shalt be called the prophet of the highest; for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto his people, by the remission of their sins." Matthew tells us that John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins." Mark says, "Camel's hair and a skin about his loins." And yet Luke says he shall be called the prophet of the highest. He don't say anything about slovenly or filthy; nor do we read that his peculiar dress retarded our Lord's cause.

Perhaps some call it one of the peculiarities, when brethren dress their children with plain, substantial goods, not cut after the order of the world; for when we behold how the world dresses, and how they dress their children, we cannot refrain from saying, "Indecency!" To such I would say, look and see how your Savior was dressed. When a little child they wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger.

Perhaps one of the peculiarities is, that our brethren in general oppose an educated ministry. To such I would say, our Savior was our exemplar in all things, and the first he called were poor, illiterate fishermen. Although unlearned and ignorant, yet their preaching was so powerful on one occasion, that the people were pierced to their hearts and cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" I do not want to be understood, dead to education, but I do not want that education which comes with enticing words, which is termed man's wisdom, and is foolishness with God. We want education enough to read the Bible, and common sense enough to know what God requires of us. Let us try to walk in the old paths.

In love.

A. S. CULP.

OTT, Coos Co., OREGON. }
November 3d, 1873. }

My dear Christian friends:

Again I have taken my pen to converse with you, which has so long been delayed; but every time I thought of writing I felt my inability so much the more. But I know there are several of our friends and brethren that would like to hear from us through the C. F. C., as to how we like the country by this time, I will just say, that we are not sorry yet that we have come here. We all like the climate very much. It is very nice and pleasant weather: cool nights and several frosty mornings. But we have had no rain to amount to much since the first of last July, but there is yet none needed. We expect to soon have a good share of it, as the rainy season is fast approaching. We can see on almost every tree, plant and herb, that winter is not far distant.

Now a few words about our little church. We have meeting every Sunday, and generally a good turnout for this place, and tolerable good attention. Some, of course, are young and giddy, and get a little boisterous, by times, but they care not what they do, or what will be the result, or they would not do so. Our little body has doubled its number, and one over, in the last few weeks. Two moved here from Iowa, Thomas Barklow and wife; and on last Sunday a week there were two baptized; and on last Sunday there were five more added to the church by baptism, four out of one family, the father and mother, and two young girls. It was a beautiful scene, indeed, to see a family go together in a good cause. We feel that the Lord will visit his people here in Oregon, as well as elsewhere. We feel somewhat encouraged. We did, at times, feel a little *dis*couraged, being here over one year and not one addition to the church. But now there is a start made, and we think there are still others counting the cost. But every bitter must have its sweet, and every sorrow its joy. Yesterday while at the place of meeting, before meeting began, we had the happy privilege of meeting two of our old acquaintances from Pa., namely, brother Christ Hinkle and John L. Holsinger and two of the Potes. They got through their journey safely, although very tired, as they came some sixty miles on foot. The general health in this valley is good. Permit me to close in love. Your sister,

ANNE BARKLOW.

From Howard County, Kansas.

Dear Brethren Editors:

I will try by the grace of God, to give the readers of the C. F. C., a sketch of church news, and how we are prospering in this part of God's moral vineyard. We number, in all, about twenty-eight members at present, with very fair prospects of more coming in next spring. Among the rest, one speaker, Ephraim Shuck, who has been here and has taken a claim. We had a lovefeast this fall, and truly it was a feast of love. The laboring brethren who were with us, were from Franklin, Anderson and Neosho counties of this state. There was an election held at the meeting on Saturday for one speaker and two deacons; but there was three run almost together, there was three chosen to the office of deacon: brethren Jacob Ulery, Jeremiah Hollinger and your unworthy writer. The lot fell on brother Byron Mahorney for speaker, so that leaves us at present with two speakers, and four deacons. We intend, the Lord willing, to hold a series of meetings sometime during the winter. Would like for the brethren to come and be with us, during the meetings. The doctrine of the Brethren is a new thing to a great many here, especially to the Seven-day Adventists, as there is a settlement of them living right in our vicinity. They are an upright, honest kind of people—very strict in keeping the seventh day in place of the first, which commences with them, on Friday evening about sundown, and ends on Saturday at about the same time.

Something about our temporal affairs of this life, land, crops, &c. Any of the brethren who contemplate coming west to obtain homes, will do well by coming here, as we have a good country. Crops do well here. Wheat, on bottom land, averages about 25 bushels to the acre; corn, about 40 bushels per acre; potatoes, was a pretty good crop. We have had scarcely any cold weather yet, but is very dry and windy. Cattle look well and have not been fed anything yet.

P. S. Claims, improved can be had at from $200.00 up to 700.00. Claims in this section of country are about all taken. Any further information concerning the country, will be cheerfully given by addressing the undersigned. Yours in love.

JOHN A. STUDEBAKER.

Greenfield, Kansas.

My Wandering Mind.

I am now alone with my children, wife having gone home to see her long absent sister, from the West, of whose return we have had tidings. How anxiously we have been waiting and looking for her return home. Now she has come—landed safely to greet her aged mother, brothers and sisters, with gladness and joy! Oh! how delightful the enjoyment of friends when all is well. But now, soon, these joyful hearts will have to ache with the pain of parting. Then we can tell whether we love them or not. When we have to part, then that one thing needful, and that alone, is solemnly impressed on each mind; for we know that if we possess it, and continue faithful until death, we shall meet again without any more pains of parting. But while we are lamenting to see her leave us, and think how hard it is, let us think of her husband and children at home. They are waiting and praying for her safe return. So when we are grieving, they are rejoicing. But oh, how many hearts would be pained if an enemy would destroy her on the way! Terrible would be the news to all that are rejoicing while all is well.

Friendly reader, we are all, to some extent, similarly situated as travellers; from the morning of live to the evening of death we are liable to the same enemies; and we have our many friends, whom we dearly love and who love us, in a foreign land. We have fathers and mothers, brothers, sisters and children, daughters and sons, that were as near as these, and are yet; but we are in the flesh, and forgetful and weak. But let us think, for a moment, of that time when we shall greet all these in that beautiful heaven, where there shall be no parting. When saints are called to cross that chilly stream, by that last enemy, Death, oh, how we lament their departure! But do we think, while we are weeping, of that great rejoicing on the other side of that stream, and how many near and dear friends, are there to welcome them home? If no other friends have been lucky enough to get there, no doubt they will find some little ones there, and that loving Lamb that is the light of that world, that has redeemed them, and washed them, and made them white in his own blood.

The question here arises, shall we know our sister, our mother, and our child there, when we meet them, as we do here? I answer, according to the case of the rich man and Lazarus, in the 16th chapter of Luke, we will know them, and those who are left at home, or behind, and what road they are on, and what relation we are to each other on each side of the stream. In this chapter they claim Abraham as their father, each other as brethren, and their brethren that are behind. We are also informed that we shall know Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all of the prophets, in the kingdom of God. See Luke 13: 28.

Now, seeing that we will be rational creatures, knowing each other, and that will be enjoyment forever, oh! let us all try to meet there, if possible, that not one may have to lament his condition, as the rich man, in eternal punishment.

Dear reader, we can hear this rich man forewarning us not to come into that place; preaching to us from hell. Could we hear our friends in heaven calling us—the children calling their parents, and parents their children, as we are wending our way to that place of torment,—would we not stop? Oh, let us hear the Savior saying, "Behold! I stand at the door and knock," &c.

GEORGE W. LEATHERMAN.

A Visit to the "City of Brotherly Love."

DEAR COMPANION: Agreeable to promise, I will give you a brief description of our late visit to the "City of Brotherly Love." I was accompanied by my wife. The object of our visit was to find a home where the climate would be less severe than in Somerset Co., Pa; the condition of my health being such as to disqualify me for out door exercise, in our locality, a large portion of the year. On our trip we visited Washington and Baltimore; but our objective point was Philadelphia. In the latter city we remained six days, visiting many objects of note and great interest to the curious; but time and space will only permit me to mention a few.

The Public Ledger Building, S. W. corner of Sixth and Chestnut streets, is a magnificent structure, erected at a cost of half a million dollars. This establishment has not its superior for its purpose in the world. The Public Ledger is considered one of the best papers amongst the many good ones published in America. Their present issue numbers about ninety thousand daily. Their printing capacity per hour is something over forty-three thousand. Mr. Childs, the proprietor, is deservedly one of the most popular men of the city. His deeds of charity, kindness, and general philanthropy are practical and munificent. With such men controlling and shaping public sentiment and enterprise, we need not wonder that Philadelphia is assuming such gigantic proportions, having a world-wide reputation for its institutions of learning, asylums, &c.

From Mr. Childs' establishment we wended our way to the U. S. Mint, a description of which I will omit; but I would remark that vast quantities of that the love of which is the "root of all evil," is manufactured and handled here; and were it not for the admonition in the quotation marks, we might have been tempted to handle some of the bright coins. The machinery used here is very expensive, the best that can be made, almost perfect, turning out bright silver dimes or twenty dollar gold pieces, as the case may be, as fast as you could count them.

From here we went to the Deaf and dumb Asylum. Here we expected to meet two of our mute friends. Mr. Daniel Paul not being in, we next asked to see our young friend, Mr. McKenzie, from Dale City, Pa., who has only been here for two years. His progress, considering the circumstances, is really remarkable. He likes the school very much, and his teachers speak highly of him. He seems to be enjoying life very much. He is studying orthography, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, history, &c. To complete his studies, he will have to remain three years longer. Whilst obtaining a practical education, he will also be taught a useful trade. When I asked him what trade he was acquiring, he shewed me by signs that he was learning to be a tailor. After conducting us through the buildings, and explaining many things of interest to us, when we were about leaving, he thanked us for our visit, and invited us to call again. This institution is extensively patronized, and is certainly a credit to the City and State, and—a redeeming quality of the age we live in.

We visited many other places of equal interest—educational and otherwise,—but to make a description of them interesting to the readers of the C. F. C., would require more time and space than I am at present allowed. If I am spared, I purpose to locate in this City by next spring, when, if desired, I may write a series of articles descriptive of some of the great institutions, buildings, and public benefactions, reared in the metropolis of Pennsylvania.

On the 24th a series of meetings was commenced at the Brethren's new meeting-house on Marshall street. Brethren Isaac Price and Jacob T. Myers, from adjoining churches, and brother Jesse P. Hetric, from Armstrong county, were expected to minister. Our time and engagements only permitted us to remain for the first meeting, but at the conclusion of these meetings we will have a description of them by one of the brethren present. A description of the Brethren's new meeting-house was given in the C. F. C., by brother H. R. Holsinger, when on his recent visit east. I would only add that the house is a substantial brick building, plain, but comfortably furnished; just such a house as the Brethren should have. The members seem to be zealous working Christians. Their Sabbath-school is in a prosperous condition, numbering some eighty scholars. The Sabbath we were present the School was addressed by Elder Jacob Spanogle. His remarks were eminently practical, urging the teachers and officers to deeds of charity—to go to the high-ways and by-ways, to seek out the poor, the sick, and afflicted, and minister to their wants, clothe and feed them, and then bring them to Sunday-school, where they would receive the proper religious instruction, and thus be led to love their Creator, their Savior, and the people of God. By these means the Sabbath-school would be an auxiliary to, and a stepping stone into the church militant, and a prominent and legitimate means for the promulgation of the religion of Jesus Christ. The Sabbath-school gives every member the happy privilege of doing something for the upbuilding of Christ's Kingdom. Here the humblest member will be able to improve his talents to a good and noble purpose.

We believe that under the fostering care of the brethren and sisters here, and the grace and blessing of God, our common Father, this school will yield glorious results.

Whilst we sojourned in the City, we enjoyed the kind hospitalities of brother Spanogle and his family. Himself or his daughter, sister Edna, generally accompanying us in our sight-seeing excursions.

Our time did not permit us to visit many of the Brethren at their homes, and thus become personally acquainted with their families. We dined at the house of brother Isaac Hunsberger, and enjoyed the company and hospitalities of his interesting family. We also met several of the Brethren at their places of business; found them, as a class, genial, intelligent, persevering, enterprising, prosperous, well-to-do business men, bearing the reputation of peaceable, law-abiding, worthy and reliable citizens.

The church here has an extensive mission. Philadelphia is one of the largest cities in the United States, having a population of between eight and nine hundred thousand souls. Our young brother Jacob T. Meyers attends College here, and preaches for the Germantown congregation every Lord's day.

In concluding this article, we will yet add, that we received nothing but kindness whilst absent. On our return we found our family and the friends in reasonable health, for which we feel humbly grateful to our Heavenly Father.

DR U. M. BEUCHLY.

Dale City, Pa.

Nebraska—the Homestead State.

Within five years ending with June, 1872, more than two-and-a-half million (2,561,705) acres were homesteaded in Nebraska. This area was more than one-tenth of all the acres taken up as homesteads during twice that number of years in all the Union, namely, 25,173,369. Up to 1868, and Minnesota—and Minnesota alone—was a greater favorite than Nebraska with homesteaders. This preference may have resulted from Nebraska's being supposed liable to droughts—or from its fertility not having been fully proved—or from the speedy completion of the transcontinental railroad not being certain. But every year since 1868, Nebraska has been the homesteader's first choice. Within four years of that date the Nebraska acres homesteaded outnumbered those thus taken in Minnesota by about 600,000—in exact figures, 590,202.

Multitudes of Nebraska homesteaders took up farms, with which they had fallen in love as they passed, west of the Missouri, freighting to Pike's Peak, or Salt Lake, or overland to California, or building the Union Pacific Railroad. The moment their occupation as freighters was gone, they were ready to begin as farmers. The American Desert bug-bear had no terrors for them. They had seen the soil to be proof against both drought and deluge—unsurpassed in its yield either of wheat or corn—and the perfect paradise of stock-dealers.

Their first markets were the best, namely: feeding the migrational waves which flowed over and beyond them; then they sent their crops to mines and military posts; next, their surplus streamed down the Missouri to St. Louis, but was soon diverted in part from both Southern and Western markets to Chicago—especially when stowed in bags of hog-skin and cow-hide.

Nebraska will long be the Mecca of homesteaders; but for the last three years it has been equally the resort of buyers of railroad land. Over three thousand settlers have bought of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad. Some of them also homesteaded. Those who did not, judged railroad lands better than free farms, considering their position, quality, and the terms of sale—long credit—first pay-day far off, low interest, prices, free and half fares and half freights, great premiums for speedy tillage, &c.

PROF. J. D. BUTLER.

From Duncansville Congregation.

BROTHER HENRY: There seems to be no way so effectual in preaching the gospel, as putting down the stakes, as though we were going to make a permanent stay at a place, and there invite people to come and followship with us. It will do very well to test new fields, to preach in school-houses, and houses of other denominations; but when we have given the work a fair trial in a certain place, and think that there are prospects of enlarging the borders of Zion, then prudence would say, "Build an altar unto the Lord—make a religious home there." Such was the feeling of the Duncansville congregation in respect to its territory around Lamersville. Accordingly a motion was set on foot, and after one year's deliberation and reflection the work was started. A subscription was taken up, which proved that the means at home were too short for the undertaking. An appeal was then made to the neighboring congregations and responded to so liberally that a house 28 x 40 feet was put under course of erection, and is now (though not quite completed) ready for use, and will be dedicated to the service of the Lord on Christmas day, and the meeting continued for several days. We make this public notice of the fact, in order to elicit the assistance of ministering brethren from our neighboring congregations, as well as those from a distance who may have in contemplation a visit at or near that time. And also to make it generally known that we have a house here, that traveling brethren may find us at any time and favor us with their visits. The house spoken of is close to the Morrison Cove branch of the Penna. R. R., which branches off from the main stem of the road at Altoona City. The house is only about fourteen miles from the City. The station to stop at is McKees. For farther particulars address the undersigned.

We feel to give thanks to God for the assistance we have received, and through which we are now enabled to have a comfortable place where we can worship "under our own vine and fig tree"; and we trust that the assistance of our brethren will be as "bread cast upon the waters"; or as seed sown in the morning, that, when the ingathering comes, it will be precious immortal souls.

JAMES A. SELL

Newry, Pa.

JOHNSVILLE, Md., }
Nov. 27th, 1873 }

Dear brother Editors: Your liberal offer of the Brethren's Almanac, induces me to enclose 75 cents, for which please send me one dozen. If I cannot sell, I will give to brethren. True, I never was a subscriber to the C. F. C., but always to the Gospel Visitor; and my son-in-law, brother D. R. Stitely, has always taken the C. F. C. He and I live in the same house, and will continue to take the C. F. C.; but at this time think to go in brother Morningstar's club. Should he fail to get up a club for the next volume, I will try to make up a little club for your paper. I like to read it.

We are well, thank the good Lord; and we fondly hope this may find you under the good blessing of God. Our fall communion came off on the 25th of October. There were, perhaps, 300 communicants. We had brethren Benjamin Moomaw and his son John C. Moomaw, from Roanoke Co., Va., with us, who labored much by preaching the word, and in the doctrine of the faith once delivered to the saints. The good Lord reward them richly for their labors.

I. PFAUTZ.

A Query.

Is it according to the spirit of the Gospel and the counsel of the church of God for members, and even ministers, to engage in the banking business; and borrow money at 6 per cent, even less if they can, and when a brother wishes to borrow out of the bank, to charge him 12 per cent. interest? We would like some one to give a scriptural answer.

A. BROTHER.

Announcements.

The Lord willing, we will have a series of meetings in the Dry Valley Meeting-house, Mifflin Co., Pa., commencing on the evening of Dec. 20th, and we think of continuing it about a week. We invite all who desire to be with us, and especially ministering brethren. Fraternally,

JACOB MOHLER.

There will be a series of meetings at the Maple Grove Meeting-house, in Ashland Co., Ohio, commencing on the evening of the 3d of Jan. 1874, and continue each day and evening till the evening of the 11th. The meeting will close then unless further agreed. A general invitation to all, especially ministers. Ashland and Nankin are the stations on the A. & G. W. R. R.

By order of the church.

W. SADLER.

LIST OF MONEYS RECEIVED for SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS, etc.,

George Click	$ 40	Lewis Kimmel	75
J B Landis	3 00	D B Heiney	40
Samuel Gelb,	1 50	S M Minnich	40
S A Garber	1 10	J K Smith	25
M B Leas	40	Mary Ann Mow	1 75
Samuel Bock	75	D B Rhodes	45
Emanuel Henry	1 60	Jacob R Byerly	1 00
John McCreary	40	Blanch & Stutzman	75
Isaac Pfoutz	75	G W Burkhart	75
Polly Witwer	25	N Longenecker	1 40
David Holsinger	1 50	E S Rigby	10
I W Martin	2 00	B Frantz	20
S S Hartzler	13
J Howard Ellis	75

WE will admit a limited number of select advertisements at the following rates
One Insertion, 20 cents a line.
Each subsequent insertion 15 cents a line.
Yearly advertisements, 10 cents a line.
No standing advertisement of more than 20 lines will be admitted, and no cuts will be inserted on any considerations.

FAREWELL REMARKS, with a historical view of the establishment, growth &c. of the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION, PIOUS YOUTH and BRETHREN'S ALMANAC, by H. R. Holsinger, will be found in our Almanac for 1874.

TERMS: Single copy, postpaid, 10 cents; six copies, 40 cents; and twelve copies, 75 cents.

Undenominational but EVANGELICAL

International LESSONS! AGENTS WANTED For samples, club rates, &c., address,

AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER. Fifth year. $1.50 per year. Single copy 15c.

BEST HELP for SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS and Officers published.

J.W. McIntyre, 4 South Fifth St. St. Louis.

TRAPPERS, &c.

How to trap, and fish, and tan furs. All for 50 cents. Address

WILLIAM DAILY.
Nimissilla.
9: 41—5t. Summit Co., Ohio.

FRUIT TREES, SMALL FRUITS.

Ornamental trees and plants. Choice garden and field seeds, &c. A splendid stock of the choicest varieties. Send for descriptive catalogues and priced list. All trees well packed so as to carry to any part of the United States.

EDW'D J. EVANS & Co.,
Nurserymen and Seedsmen.
YORK, PA.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

BEDFORD DIVISION.

On and after August 14th, 1873, Passengers Trains will leave Bridgeport as follows, viz.:

MT. DALLAS ACCOM., at 7: 50 A. M.

HUNTINGDON EXPRESS at 2: 55 P. M.

RETURNING.

EXPRESS, leaves Bedford at 10: 40 A. M. arriving at Bridgeport at 11: 52 A. M.

ACCOMMODATION, leaves Bedford at 1: 40 P. M., arriving at Bridgeport at 3: 20 P. M. in time to connect with P. & C. trains for Dale City, Somerset, &c.

W. H. BROWN, Supt.

AGENTS WANTED FOR
HOME LIFE IN THE BIBLE
By DANIEL MARCH, D.D.

This work teaches how men lived in Bible times and how to live in all times. "It pleases, profits, pays." "It is precious as gems." "It glows with living light on every page." The style is full and flowing, clear and sparkling. Agents sold of the author's former works. "NIGHT SCENES," and "OUR FATHER'S HOUSE," nearly 100,000 copies each. They should now canvass the same territory for "Home Life" his latest and best work. Employment for young men, ladies, teachers and clergymen in every county. Send for circular and secure first choice of territory. ZEIGLER & M'CURDY, 518 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE
"SILVER TONGUE" ORGANS,

Manufactured by E. P. Needham & Son, 143. 145 & 147 East 23d St., New York. Established in 1846. Responsible parties applying for agencies in sections still unsupplied will receive prompt attention and liberal inducements. Parties residing at a distance from our authorized agents may order from our factory. Send for illustrated price list.

HISTORICAL CHART OF BAPTISM.

A complete key to the history of trine, and origin of single immersion. The most interesting, reliable, and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period; and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22 by 28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting, at a glance, the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; four copies, $3 25. Sent postpaid. Address,

J H. MOORE,
Urbana,
Champaign Co., Ill.

PURE ITALIAN QUEENS

For sale the coming season of 1873. Price $2 50 each. Address, DANIEL KAGARICE, New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa. 9-9-tf.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL

The Emphatic Diaglott; or, The New Testament in Greek and English. Containing the original Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary Word-for-word English Translation. By BENJAMIN WILSON. Price $4.

Life at Home; or, The Family and its Members. By Rev. WILLIAM AIKMAN, D. D. $1.50.

Man, In Genesis and In Geology; or the Biblical Account of Man's Creation, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. $1.

Wedlock; or, the Right Relations of the Sexes. By S. R. WELLS. $1.50.

Oratory; or, the Extemporaneous Speaker. $1.50.

Hopes and Helps for the Young. $1.50.

Aims and Aids for Girls. $1.50.

Hand-Book for Home Improvement: "How to Write," "How to Talk," "How to Behave," and "How to do Business," one vol. $2.25.

How to Live; Saving and Wasting. $1.50.

Fruit Culture for the Million. $1.

Conversion of St. Paul. 75 cents.

Æsop's Fables. The People's Pictorial Ed. $1.

The Christian Household. $1.

Constitution of Man. Considered in Relation to External Objects. By GEORGE COMBE. $1.75.

Education: Its Elementary Principles founded on the Nature of Man. $1.50.

Mental Science, according to Phrenology. $1.50.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement. $1.50.

Phrenology Proved and Applied. $1.75

The Right Word in the Right Place. A New Pocket Dictionary and Reference Book. 75 cents.

Phrenological Busts. Showing the latest classification, and exact location of the Organs of the Brain. $2. Sent by express.

Natural Laws of Man. 75 cents.

Sober and Temperate Life. 50 cents.

Tea and Coffee, their Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

The Hygienic Hand-Book. $2.

The True Healing Art; or, Hygienic vs Drug Medication. 30 cents.

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. 25 cents.

Teeth; their Structure and Disease. 25 cents.

Tobacco; Its Physical, Intellectual, and Moral Effects. 25 cents.

Education of the Heart. 10 cents.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp. Address,

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa

New Hymn Books.

PLAIN SHEEP BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

PLAIN ARABESQUE BINDING.

One copy, post paid,	0.75
12 copies, post paid,	8.50

TURKEY MOROCCO,

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen,	11.25

GERMAN AND ENGLISH PLAIN SHEEP.

One copy, post paid,	1.00
Per dozen	10.30

TURKEY MOROCCO, GER. & ENG.

One copy, post paid,	1.25
Per dozen " "	13 30

PLAIN SINGLE GERMAN.

One copy, post paid,	.50
Per dozen " "	5.50

MISCELLANEOUS

Theodosia Earnest: Vol. 1. the Heroine of Faith; Vol. 2, Ten Days' Travel in Search of a Church. Price $1 60 per volume, or both volumes at one order 3 00. postage prepaid.

Grace Truman, or Love and Principle Price $1 60, postage prepaid.

Jenkins' Vest-Pocket Lexicon an English Dictionary of all except familiar words, omitting what everybody knows, and containing what everybody wants to know. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

Pocket Bibles.—Diamond. 24 mo., mor. tuck binding, gilt, with excellent references, suitable for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers. Prices by mail postage prepaid. $1 50.

The Song-Crowned King.—A new singing book set in character notes. 144 octavo pages, bound in boards. New and old tunes. Price 60 cents. $6.00 per dozen.

The Christian Harp, containing 128 pages of choice hymns set to music in character notes. Price per single copy, post paid 35 cents. $3.00 per dozen.

The Harmonia Sacra: A compilation of CHURCH MUSIC Much care has been taken in the arrangement of this work, and in the adaptation of the words to the music; and the work contains such a variety of metres, that a tune may be selected for almost every hymn in the Hymn Books of the different denominations. Price $1 40 per single copy or $14 50 per dozen, by mail, postage prepaid, or $12 00 per dozen by express.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book,

Being a compilation of Sacred Music, adapted to all the Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs in the Brethren's New Hymn Book. Price, $1 25 per copy, postpaid, or $10 00 per dozen, by express.

Revised New Testament.

OCTAVO PICA EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$2.00
Sheep Strong Binding, post paid,	2.50

18 MO. EDITION.

Plain Cloth Binding, post paid,	$1.00
Sheep Strong Binding,	1.25

32 MO., SUNDAY SCHOOL EDITION. 25

BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA. $1.70

Treatise on Trine Immersion B. F. Moomaw, prepaid, .75

Debate on Immersion, Quinter & Snyder, Single copy, post paid, .75

12 copies, by Express. 7.0

Pions Companion, S. Kinsey, post paid, .45

Browns Pocket Concordance, .60

German & English Testaments, .75

NEAD'S THEOLOGY, Post Paid, 1.45

" Wisdom & Power of God Post Paid 1.40

COMPANION Volume 3, bound post paid, $2.7

Reserved at the office, 2.25

HOW TO READ CHARACTER. An illustrated Hand-Book of Phrenology and Physiognomy, for Students and Examiners; with a Descriptive Chart. Muslin, $ 1 25

Tracts.

Religious Dialogue, 12 pages, five cents single copy; 30 cents a dozen.

All orders should be accompanied with the money and the name of person, post-office, county and State written in unmistakable letters, and addressed to

H. R. HOLSINGER, DALE CITY, PA.

Book of Essays.

Containing Address to Boys on Tobacco. To ministers on Tobacco, Evils of Intemperance, Wine, Vocal and Instrumental Music, and Dancing; Human Government, Human Life, Crisis of 63, Public Opinion, Voting for War, On the Mountain Sermon, Future State, Time Unknown.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS COMMENDING THE ESSAYS.

One Writer.—"It is just what it ought to be on Tobacco, Music and War."

Another.—"I think your book a very good one."

"The book is a splendid one."

"Find nothing therein that is contrary to the teaching of Christ."

"I think it worthy of an extensive circulation.

"I find therein good counsel.

"Your book of essays, I believe, contains much truth, well spoken.

"Apart from works of inspiration, it is the most important work for the young.

"You have given the young an excellent lecture on the use of Tobacco.

"Your views are Scriptural, and your book is calculated to do good."

"I think your book is one of good advice.

"I read it with interst.

228 pages, Price 60 cents. Address T. F. TUKESBURY, Brentwood. N. H.

BRETHREN'S TUNE AND HYMN BOOKS.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn books may be obtained at the Book Store of J. F. Funk & Bro., in Elkhart, Ind.

1780 1873

DR. FAHRNEY'S

Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

A tonic and purge, for Blood Diseases. Great reputation. Many testimonials. Many ministering brethren use and recommend it. Ask or send for the "Health Messenger." Use only the "Panacea" prepared by

Dr. P. FAHRNEY,
431 W. Lake St. Chicago, Ill.

AND

Dr. P. FAHRNEY'S BRO'S & Co.
Waynesboro, Franklin Co. Pa.

☞ Agents Wanted Everywhere. ☜

Christian Family Companion.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 per Annum.

VOLUME IX. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, DEC. 16, 1873. NUMBER 50.

For the COMPANION.

Glorifying God.

It is commendable in the saints of God to praise, to extol, and to adore His most holy name. Paul recommends that we glorify God in our bodies and in our spirits. It is out of the question to suppose that we can, in an acceptable manner, glorify God with our souls or spirits while Satan is holding a high festival in our body, or flesh. One of the most cunning devices of Satan to lead men to sin, is that of varnishing his wares with would-be holy things. How often we are made sad to see and learn how God's name and the name of Jesus are used to advance and build up some deep laid scheme of Satan. Some men would glorify by singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and turn around and dance to the tune of "Yankee Doodle." Not long since I saw a man raise both hands high above his head and praise God for a work of deception he had been instrumental in bringing about.

How many good meaning people are led to church houses, and halls, through supposed motives of good, under the polished garb of religion, and there induced to engage in "pious" gambling, and that, too often for purposes to gratify the lust of the eye in adorning houses of worship! It is claimed by some that the building of richly adorned houses of worship is one way of glorifying God. The giving of a penny to the least of the Lord's disciples, through proper motives, will be more to the praise of God than millions devoted to the adorning of a temple for show.

Some good people claim they can glorify God in a Sunday-school picnic, gotten up after the fashion of a worldly-minded worshiping people. Yes, they would glorify God in that which is under the generalship of the world—Satan leading the van and God receiving the praise! Away, away with such abominations—take not the name of the Lord in vain! Oh! let us beware of those who "steal the livery of heaven to serve the world in." God can only be glorified in an acceptable manner by actions and motives emanating from a soul entirely consecrated to the service of God. The sound of a defective bell falls dead on the ear. In like manner a soul imbued in sin, pride, and a love for the world's ways and earth's pleasures, cannot glorify God to acceptance. Honesty of purpose outside of the requirements of the law hath no promise of good in the word of God. Oh! then, let us glorify God in our bodies and spirits, in that way that we may insure the great blessings of our heavenly Father. If we expect to glorify God in heaven with all the redeemed, as children learning to lisp his name, we must learn to glorify him here in deed and truth.

J. S. FLORY.

How To Pray.

Mere lip prayer, and heart prayer have no connection. The one is hypocrisy; the other, deep, ardent piety. What has piety to do with hypocrisy? We must pray with the heart. We must have faith, believing that God is able and willing to grant our requests. We should never pray blindly. First ascertain what your wants are. To pray without knowing what you pray for, is an absurdity. And yet, some pray without a moment's thinking what their wants are. We must pray with a great deal of earnestness; but not with excitement. Earnestness and excitement are different things. The prayer containing the most words, it not always the best. I fear, many pray with too many words and too few thoughts. Dr. Luther comes to the true point, He says: "When thou prayest, let thy words be few, but thy thoughts and feeling many and deep. The less thou speakest, the better thy prayers. Few words and much thought is a Christian frame. Many words and little thought is heathenish. The prayer that is external and of the body, is the mere mumbling of the lips, that outward babble, gone through without attention, and heard and seen of men; but by prayers in the spirit and in the truth is the inward desire, the motions and the sighs that proceed from the depth of the heart. The former is the prayer of hypocrites. and of those who trust in themselves. The latter is the prayer of God's children who walk in his fear." From experience and observation, we know the words of the Reformer to be true. They hold out. How to pray, is a momentous subject. Nothing can be of more importance, than examining ourselves and ascertaining whether we pray as we should. It is well worth while; for so much depends on it.—From The American Lutheran.

For the Companion.

The Two Doors.

Life is often called a journey from the cradle to the grave. There is a door of entrance and a door of exit. One is called birth and the other death. All who pass through the first door are destined to pass through the second; and our own will is not consulted in either case. A sacred writer in speaking of these two doors, says, better is the day of death than the day of one's birth. How can this be? To the young and happily situated in this world, this seems a "hard saying." It is so common to regard death as the king of terrors, an iron-hearted tyrant, a cruel reaper who cuts down the choicest flowers of our hearts and homes. To those who enjoy life, it is not hard to understand why birth is good, but to many such it is very hard to understand why death should be called better.

Birth is good. It makes us heirs of a world full of beauty and attainable goodness. The earth is not the "howling wildernes" that some would make us believe. It is carpeted with a beautiful verdure every spring-time, fresh from the loom of mother Nature; and every winter covers its bosom with a mantle as pure and spotless as the robe of righteousness itself. There are flowers by every pathway—even in the desert. Behold the lilies of the field and rainbow colors painted everywhere by the yellow sunbeam; study the charming landscape scenes painted by a divine Artist, read the interesting story that cluster around every picture, written upon every tree and rock and blade of grass. Listen to the music of the birds and the brooks, and, above all, to the songs of happy children in the Sunday-school, and of the redeemed in the sanctuary, and answer; is the earth a howling wilderness? Oh! no, except to those who would make it such, and they will always proclaim it nothing else. The world is what we make it. No power save our own wills can exclude the kingdom of heaven from our hearts; and where that kingdom is, there is righteousness, joy and peace in the Holy Ghost.

Birth is good because it enables us to enter the vineyard of the blessed Master, and to experience in our own hearts more and mere of that unspeakable joy which every virtuous and useful life affords.

Birth is good. Why is death better? It is better because heaven is better than earth. It is better because it is the beginning of an endless life rather than a transitory existence. It is better because the disembodied spirit has its capacities increased and strengthened and can enjoy to the full those heavenly pleasures of which here on earth it merely had a foretaste.

But this applies only to the pure in heart. Of many it might be said, "better had it been for them had they never been born." To such the day of birth is not good; it is a most unfortunate day. Yet it is not the most unfortunate. Sin has pleasures, such as they are, and there is such a thing as really enjoying these pleasures. But there is no pleasures or enjoyment inside the prison walls of hell. Death is the iron door that opens into this prison, and it is certainly not better than birth, which ushers into a world where the sun rises upon the evil as well as upon the good, where the rain falls upon the unjust as well as upon the just, and where, in consequence, men often seem to flourish in proportion to their wickedness, injustice, and selfishness, all such may realize sooner or later that the door through which they enter upon the miry path of sin, is, to them, the fatal trap, the wide gate on the broard road that leads to destructson. Also, that a sense of this destruction is not realized until it is too late—until beyond the second door, where we believe there is anguish of spirit as terrible as it is lasting and hopeless. Birth is unfortunate if we lead the life of a Dives, a Herod, or a Judas, but, alas! what is death to such! Let us not be numbered with them. Let us lead true lives and thus gain the glorious victory spoken of the apostle—a over death, hell and the grave. To the wicked, death is terrible, but to the good it is only "falling asleep in Jesus"—it is the door of heaven, the beatiful gate on the path that leads to the New Jerusalem above.

J. M. Zuck.

Lebanon, Ohio.

Two Brothers Reconciled in Court.

A singular scene occurred in a Connecticut Court-room a few days ago, which is thus described by the Bridgeport Standard: "Two brothers named Adams, of Westport, have been on unfriendly terms for several years, and a short time ago they came to blows. Each of them complained to a justice, and each of them was found guilty of a breach of the peace. Both appealed. Their cases came before the Superior Court last week, and one of them was found guilty, and in the case of the other the jury could not agree. Friday morning Judge Foster called both of them before him, and talked to them in a most serious manner, and, after a short review of the affair, told them it was entirely wrong and shameful for them to conduct themselves in such a manner toward each other. 'Even strangers live in peace, and why should not you? You have not even the excuse of youth and hot blood, but have arrived at an age when the passions should be under control.' He then appealed to one of them in a slightly sarcastic manner: 'You have always used your brother well?'—'yes,'—'and he has always abused you?—'yes.' He then turned to the other with the same questions, and received similar answers. 'Then' said he, 'you are both to blame. There is fault on both sides, and I don't know which is the worst.' He showed them the folly of their present dispute, and admonished them if they had any grievance in the future about property to settle it among themselves, or to call in their neighbor to help them, 'but do not go to law. Law is an expensive luxury.' Then he appealed to both of them to be friends hereafter, and turning to one of them he put the question solemnly as in a marriage service, 'You,—Adams, do promise on your part that you will be friends with your brother.' The response came ringing out. 'I will.' Then to the other the Judge put the same questions, 'You,——Adams, do promise,' &c., to which came an equally prompt 'I will.' 'Then shake hands,' said the Judge, and as they did so there was not a dry eye in the court-room. One of the brothers sobbed out, 'By the blessing and help of God I will try to live peaceably with my brother.' The other signified the same. 'Then' said the Judge, addressing the one who had been found guilty, 'I will impose upon you the lightest sentence of the Court, one dollar, and I discharge your bond.' During the closing scenes of this remarkable address of the Judge, the State Attorney and the members of the bar were all affected to tears.

Selected by Nancy Bray.

Domestic Life.

Domestic life is the school of patience. Its duties, its difficulties, and its delights, too, are constantly recurring. Only the work of to-day can be done to-day. There is a sameness, also, in the mere external form, an ever-recurring round that must disgust, or make one a mere mechanical drudge, unless the heart is put into the work, and the little, common, trivial acts are made the embodiment of noble ends. Step by step, stich by stich, stroke by stroke the work goes on. One round of duty is completed only to commence another. Every day is a lesson and exercise in patience. It is a good lesson, we need to learn and practice it. It helps us to another work which is absolutely necessary to the perfection of human character and the happiness of home, and that is the surrender of self. When two persons unite in the marriage relation they become one by mutual concessions. They naturally approach each other. There is much to give up as well as to give on both sides. There are many sharp corners to round off, many rough surfaces to be made smooth, and many crooked ways to be mane straight, and irregularites to be adjusted. Same of these are in very grain of the constitution, some of them have been confirmed and hardened into habit, and it is difficult to make any impression upon them. Neither must seek to make self the standard, and to exact all the surrender and conformity from the other. Neither must seek to become the other, but something better than either. When two substances unite, chemically, the result is a substance different from either of its components. So it should be in marriage; the result should be favorable to husband and wife. Each one should become freer, nobler, stronger, purer and wiser--should attain to a higher excellence than either could attain alone. This will always be the result when the rule of action is mutual surrender, accommodation and help. Each should inquire, What can I yield? In what respect and how far can I reform?

Can a Criminal Obtain Pardon?

D. P. Sayler still contends that if a man sheds another's blood, by man shall his blood also be shed. Gen. 9: 5, 6. Sayler says, he "advocates no method of dealing with murderers at all; he only held, and still holds, that wilful murder is sin unto death, which is not to be prayed for, and must be atoned by paying the penalty." Is that so? Must a criminal give his life at the gallows, in order to atone for his sin? And he goes on and says: "With the understanding that the children of God, (namely the Church) who belong to the Kingdom which is not of this world, have no part in the execution of the law, not being appointed to that office." He wishes to be excused from the execution of the law; thinks the sinner or worldly man should prosecute him to final justice. Sayler stands on inconsistent ground. If God's laws are right and just, and the Scriptures demand the life of the criminal, would it not be right for him to carry the law into execution? He brings to the front an array of testimony from the old dispensation, to prove his theory or belief. We know all the familiar passages in the Bible which are quoted by all lovers of the gallows. They may be run off from the end of one's tongue as glibly as tunes. Sayler says also, "Unless Dosch shows scripture in which God has authorized the Legislatures of the States, religious press, to change, annul, and make void the law." (I suppose he has reference to the law of God.) I don't suppose the several Legislatures will interfere with the cherished ancient law that Sayler has quoted; but it should not be forgotten that though this Book is authority, and for the guidance of humanity, all are not agreed as to the significance of certain declarations; and it is a fact that more enlightened views are necessary in the rendering of scriptural meanings. I prefer to take a humane view when circumstances warrant it. We should be governed rather by the spirit than the letter of the law. Among the countries of Europe that have abolished the law of the gallows, we may instance Russia. In that despotic realm, by Elizabeth, in 1741, under the operation of the law, Russia is one of the countries in which the least number of murders is committed. In 1830 the Counsellor of State, in Russia, in his Book of Travels through the Empire, calls upon other nations to "blush that Russia should teach them the celestial principle of reforming depraved morals, not by the inexorable justice, but by the mild and divine precepts of heavenly mercy.

In my former article on this subject, No. 41, page 653, I held forth the idea that hanging, or, in other words, the present mode of treating prisoners, in most of our prisons in this country, was unchristian, unsuccessful and barbarous. But Sayler writes in No. 45, page 716, for me to excuse him for not believing God to be a barbarian. You are excusable, dear friend, indeed. As an answer to this I will just say, and reiterate what I wrote before, that better be governed by the spirit than the letter of the law, and unless our Christian religion be a mistake, man may repent, be forgiven and be saved. "God has commanded all men, everywhere to repent." The Bible unequivocally settles this question for us. "Thus saith the Lord, though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow," and so forth. We here will add also, and with emphasis, that the free grace of God flows out to every man. The blood of Christ is, and can be made available for every man, and faith in its merits is attainable by every man; it only remains for the guilty to accept salvation on the terms of the Gospel, in order to secure the pardon of their sins, and a title to the Kingdom of Heaven. Is it not true that the worst may repent and be saved?

"While the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return.

L. A. Dosch.

Brookville, Ohio.

For the Companion.

It is I, Be Not Afraid.

When the above language was spoken by Jesus, it was undoubtedly a sentence of consolation, a word of cheerfulness in an hour of peril as the ship which contained his disciples was tossed to and fro by the waves, for the wind was contrary and while they were rowing hard to bring the ship to shore. Jesus was on the mountain alone engaged in prayer (not that he must of necessity pray, but Thy will, O Father, be done), and he, no doubt, prayed in behalf of the disciples who were in this ship, that their courage fail not—that they should faithfully battle on and they would be rescued from a watery grave. Then in the midst of trouble, when their strength was nearly exhausted, how cheering the words, "It is I, be not afraid." How often when our ship is tossed to and fro by the trials and temptations of sin and folly, and all appears dark before our eyes, oh, how consoling when we look to Jesus and He smiles upon us, "It is I, be not afraid."

There is something very consoling in this "It is I, be not afraid." Whenever Christ draws near fear vanishes away, and joy abounds in the heart; for wherever Christ is there is peace and happiness.

Now, brethren and sisters, if placed in overwhelming affliction or distress of any kind hear that beautiful voice "It is I, be not afraid." Are you in sickness, are you in trouble, is the torture of disease wearing you down, are you pained and overwhelmed at what is before you; if so, Christ says, "It is I, be not afraid." Or are you mourning over departed ones whom you have laid beneath the clods of the valley or the snowy mound on yonder hillside; or are they buried beneath the surges of the mighty ocean. If so, calm your fears, Jesus has said, "It is I, be not afraid." And now as we are on our journey to yonder realm of glory let us ever press forward toward the mark of our high calling, and as the waves of time waft our ship onward it is still a comfort, for the wave that rolls the highest sends us nearest to the skies; the wind that blows the hardest and swiftest lands us soonest home, and the lightning that flashes around us serves to light us on our journey home to that glorious heaven to abide in perpetual peace.

"It is I, be not afraid"
The Son of God to Peter said.
He stepped, and walked upon the flood;
Then said, "I perish, save, O Lord."

J. W. Wilt.

Rural Valley, Pa.

For the Companion.

Is Knowledge Dangerous?

"A through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died." 1 Cor. 8: 11.

This language was spoken by the Apostle Paul, to his Corinthian brethren, warning them to be careful that they do not cause their "liberty to become a stumbling block to them that are weak" (9th verse); and we think this text is applicable to us, in this our day and time. The Apostle seems to think that knowledge is the main-spring of the trouble in the above text; and surely it does a great deal in the world and in the church. Sometimes we see a brother who has knowledge, or knows a goodeal (which we will term education), take up the pen and write articles reflecting very much upon the Elders, as does the article in No. 46, pages 722 and 723. The latter part of that article, no doubt, refers back to some former article on the subject of pride and the covering of heads, &c., which tradition (if tradition it is; certainly is right, if Christ gave the keys to the church when he said, "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven." &c. Consequently we hope and trust that we may not have the opportunity to read any more articles reflecting against the order of the house of God. Brethren and sisters, how can humility and separation from the world be built up, when some who have knowledge are continually pulling down? These few lines are written, not to offend, but to "exhort, reprove, rebuke," &c., by a young but well-wishing brother.

JOSEPH HOLDER.

Hagerstown, Ind.

I Will Come Again.

There is to every man a sense of loss in parting with every material thing he has ever possessed, his wealth, his business, the fruit of his long years of industry, and with the body in which he has lived; there is a sense of dreariness in the thought of his body, which almost seems himself, being carried out and buried among the dead, and there to lie beneath the beating storms of ages, until it has been absorbed into the elements, and only in a new form to be gathered up and revived when the voice of God calls it forth. There is the feeling of loneliness in going off on the mysterious and unknown voyage, the dearest objects of our love accompanying us to the shore, but no one is able to step within the dusky barge that in darkness is to bear us away.

Now surely it is enough to counterbalance all such thoughts about death and to invest with a very different aspect, if we see it but as that moment in our history when Jesus Christ comes to take us to himself. We picture death as a hideous figure coming to destroy: let us rather picture Jesus Christ in glory coming to save. We think of death ending: let us think rather of life beginning and that more abundantly. We think of losing: let us think of gaining. We think of parting: let us think of meeting. We think of going away: let us think of arriving. If a voice whispers, "You must go," let us hear the voice of the Good Shepherd saying, "I will come." If Jesus thus comes for us at death, we shall never see the grave or the churchyard. They may keep our bodies for a time, but we ourselves shall never die. We go with Jesus.

If Jesus comes for us, we do not go forth alone. When we lose hold of the clasping hands of the most beloved of all on earth, another hand, of one in whom we are all one, and whose love forever binds us all, holds us fast, and tearful faces are withdrawn only to be replaced by the countenance of one who is bone of our bone, who was a man of sorrows, who himself died, and who while he takes us away, as a triumph of his love, can comfort those we leave behind, even as he comforted Martha and Mary at Bethany, or his own mother in her hour of agony. It is thus that the one promise, "I will come again and receive you unto myself," should change darkness to light, death to life, the grave to glory, and make us exclaim with the quiet peace, the sober and solemn calm of faith in the midst of much to distract and disturb the soul, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me;" if "absent from the body, I am present with the Lord."—Dr. Norman MacLeod, in the Baptist Union.

For the COMPANION.

Truth.

Ours is an age of investigation: The prominent trait in the character of man, to-day, is, to test "all things" in the crucible of philosophy or reason. There is a Society in Chicago, and other places, whose watch-word is "Free Religion." They teach that the Bible is an invention of man, and that its system of religion is only a scheme to enslave the mind. Epicureanism still lives. And the indications are that Christ's people will have to combat in our day the same kind of philosophy that the Apostle Paul encountered at Athens.

Believing that an enemy is at our doors, it is well for us, as a church, and as individuals, to examine our fortress. Our foundation being Jesus Christ,—"for other foundation can no man lay than that is laid,"—let us be sure that we have not been so unwise as to build on this true foundation with the wood, hay, and stubble of human tradition; but let us build only with the gold, silver, and precious stones of the Gospel of Truth. The Apostle forewarns us that, if we build with the perishable,—the teachings and doctrines of men—we shall suffer loss. No difference how philosophical our way of serving God may appear to us, it will perish like hay, wood, and stubble. He will reward us only for serving Him in His way, as given to us by His Son, which is as imperishable as gold, silver, and precious stones. It is a foolish waste of time to preach our way to Christ to a people who do not believe that Christ is the Savior of men.

In the world we have the same Grecian philosophy to oppose. In the Church there may be those who "have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." They seem "ignorant of God's righteousness," and go about "to establish their own righteousness." Too much precious time may be spent in preaching ours as the only church. This time should be spent in preaching Christ the only Savior.

The foundation of our spiritual house being the Truth, let us not rear the superstructure with untruthful traditions, but obey the proverb, "Buy the truth, and sell it not." Be ready to give an error for the truth. Yes, give one thousand errors for one truth. Following an error may lead to hell; obeying the truth is the way to Heaven.

Jesus said "ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." May our desires to know all the truths of the Glad-tidings of Jesus continue to increase, and may God give His people wisdom to hold fast the Truth, is my desire. 'Let not mercy and truth forsake thee: bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thine heart."

S. M. MINNICH.

Selected for the COMPANION.

The Open Gate.

There is a gate stands open wide,
  And through its portals gleaming,
A radiance from the cross afar
  The Savior's love revealing.

CHORUS.

O, depths of mercy, can it be
That gate stands open wide for me;
Stands open wide both night and day,
  Stands open wide for me.

That open gate stands free for all
  Who seek through it salvation;
The rich and poor, the great and small,
  Of every tribe and nation.

It open stands for old and young,
  Though filled with joy or sorrow;
The spirit woos your soul along,
  The gate may close to-morrow.

O, sinner, waken from your guilt,
  Nor let your heart deceive you;
For you the blood of Christ was spilled,
  He's waiting to receive you.

O blessed spirit lead me in,
  And let me falter never;
O, make me victor over sin,
  I'll praise thee then forever.

Press onward then though foes may frown,
  While mercy's gate is open;
Accept the cross and win the crown,
  Love's everlasting token.

When on the river's brink we lay
  The cross that here is given,
And bear a crown of life away,
  We'll praise thee then in heaven.

For the COMPANION.

Education.

I fear this subject is not as highly appreciated by some as it should be. Who can object to it, when rightly looked into? Can it possibly put any one in a lower standing in any respect? Where do we find the vilest of God's creation? Among the ignorant. Where do we find those who care but little for anyone but themselves; the profaner, the drunkard, &c.? Among the unlearned. Ah! the strictly intelligent do not belong to these classes often. Then, brethren, let us send our children to common schools until they are prepared to attend a higher grade, and all who are able to send to a more refined school, where the sciences are taught more profoundly, and where the branches are taught so much more explicitly, that the pupils save time, which is valuable to them. I believe in getting all the knowledge that we can in as short a time as possible; and would be glad if there were more high schools among the brotherhood. We must be enlightened if we would be civilized. What little learning I have I got principally by going to a school at New Vienna, Clinton county, Ohio, superintended by brother Quinter, editor now of the C. F. C.

The Brethren had a good school there, but did not support it sufficiently, so it fell into other hands. Now, brethren, while we have a good school at Salem it is important that we give it all the encouragement that we can; send all the pupils to it that we can; and get all outsiders to go to it that we can; and if we have a surplus of means, let us help it all we can. By this means it will be a better school, our children can be instructed by the brethren; and it may be the means of drawing many to the church that otherwise would not come. Then I would say, don't lay a straw in the way to hinder the success of this school. We would be glad to hear encouragement from others for the school through the COMPANION, for it is there they are taught to be social and chaste; and to act humbly. Then when they have gained a good education, it matters not what business they desire to follow in after life, this knowledge is a great assistance to them. If they want to teach school, they can do so; if they want to become clerks they can do that; and if they wish to understand the sacred Scriptures, it assists them greatly in this; and in fact it is a help to them in any business they may go at; even to the farmer. This requires knowledge to carry it on as it should be, where a man farms extensively.

C. G. GARMAN.

Regency, Gentry Co., Mo.

Your Last Sabbath.

I remark that men are coming nearer to their last Sabbath. The week seems to me like a Red Sea, tossing, tossing; the Sabbath like a path cut through it, where we may go dry shod. God lifting his hand again above the waters, all our cares and annoyances whelmed in the flood.

Where did you pass your boyhood Sabbaths? You say in a New England village. You remember the church, and the green in front; and the cry of the swallows in the tower as the tap of the bell scattered them; and the quiet graveyard before it, some of the stones leaning over, and the moss almost covering the letters; the long line of horses at the hitching posts; the group at the church door; the minister, plain, and earnest, and affectionate; the children, with whom you exchanged mischievous glances, and the aged men and women, to whom you looked up with veneration, though they were sometimes asleep at the head of the pew—all of them asleep in the shadow of the church that once they frequented. Somehow, ever since then you loved Sunday to come. Its sunrise seems more golden; its noonday more bright; its evening more suggestive; and although you feel, before God, that many of your Sundays have been wasted, you still say, "Sweet Sabbath! Messenger from God! Pillow on which to put the aching head! Day fragrant to all sweet memories! How I love thee!"

If you are forty years of age, two thousand and eighty of your Sabbaths are gone. Indeed, the whole flock of them is started, and the last of them will soon spread wing. It will break from the east. The bells will ring. There will be the shuffle of young feet and of old on the way to church. The baptismal waters will be shed, the evening service will pass, the Amen will finish the benediction, the lights will be lowered, the gate will jar shut, the sexton will turn the key in the lock. Nothing peculiar in the looks of the wall that night, or in the sound of the music. But that will be the ending of your Sabbaths. Can you not have one more? Not one more. It will come for others, but not for us. The last hymn. The last sermon. The last benediction. The last Sabbath. The last time! This very Sabbath may be your closing day for rest. If so, you had better take a good look at these sacred places, and say, Farewell, pew and pulpit, and all ye worshippers! Farewell, song and sermon! I take my exit! Farewell, thou Christian Sabbath! To all these scenes, where I have rejoiced, and prayed, and wept, farewell forever! It is the last time!—Talmage.

Seek not to please the world, but your own conscience. The man who has a feeling within that he has done his duty upon every occasion is far happier than he who hangs upon the smile of the great, or still more the favors the of multitude.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, Pa., Dec. 16, 1875.

Valedictory.

"It is the last time." Eight times we have come before our readers under the above caption. Now we appear for the last time, for we will not soon follow with an "introduction."

About ten years ago, we first conceived the idea of publishing a weekly paper in the interests of the Brethren. We think we suggested it to brother Henry Kurtz, while we were yet working in the Visitor office, that the paper ought to be published weekly. But he did not see proper to make the change. After mature deliberation, we issued specimen numbers one and two, dated respectively May 10, and Oct. 4, 1864.

By the circulation of the specimen copies, and an advertisement in the Gospel Visitor, we secured the names of about four hundred subscribers, by the latter part of December, of the same year. Having promises of brethren and sisters of influence, to give us their patronage, we published the first number on the third day of January, 1865. From that time the paper has been regularly issued, appearing as promptly as the circumstances would permit. From four hundred the circulation has gradually increased to four thousand.

We have no desire to animadvert upon the "ups and downs" through which we have passed during all this time. Those who were with us, will remember them, and those who have not been with us, could not receive satisfaction in the brief space allowed us here. We attribute but little of the success of the enterprise, to ourself. Our contributors and agents have made it what it is. We beg leave here to reproduce a few sentences from the introduction to the first volume: "In the future the COMPANION will reflect, more, the number and character of its patrons, than the ability of its editor. I have built the ship and have launched it, and shall make my best efforts to guide it aright, but it will require the tide of public favor to keep it in motion, and the gentle breeze of Divine approbation, to bring it safely into port." We have had the public favor, and we trust also the blessing of God, for which we thank the Lord.

We have also had opposition to contend with, combined opposition, and such as came from high places, as all are aware who know our history. However we were enabled to overcome and endure it all, until within the last few years, our courage has been somewhat daunted; not because our opponents were succeeding, but because we were wearing out by their persistent counteraction. As most of the measures which we have been advocating through our paper, have grown into the popular favor of the church, and as most of the opposition is of a personal character, the idea of retiring from the management of the paper presented itself to our mind. During the last Annual Meeting this suggestion matured to a firm resolution, and that we would put it into execution as soon as a suitable successor could be found. Accordingly we conferred with brother Quinter upon the matter, before he returned from the Annual Meeting, which conference resulted in the change which we are now announcing. We confess that it is with no small degree of reluctance that we separate from the office of the COMPANION. Being father of the enterprise, in the conducting of which we have employed many days and nights in toil, and in connection with which we have also enjoyed many pleasant seasons, our readers will perceive that our attachment to it might well have grown quite strong. But, if the paper can be more influential, if its teachings can be more effectual, we will cheerfully make our part of the denial. And we fondly hope it may be more useful. The brother upon whom our mantle falls, has our best wishes, and our most sincere prayers, both for his own prosperity, and for the usefulness of the paper.

Our readers and patrons, who are our personal friends, because of our agreement in religious sentiment, or for other reasons, are assured that we have all confidence in the new management of the office. Brother Quinter is a man of experience, and much our superior in scripture and all other valuable knowledge. His views though not so liberal, may be sufficiently so for the purity and prosperity of the church. Besides, we believe him to be susceptible of improvement by surrounding influences, such as it is your privilege to cast about him. Brother Beer, with whom we have been closely yoked for nearly three years, and who has been thoroughly inducted with our manner of transacting business, and is well acquainted with our good views, will be his right hand man, and we feel very confident in the assertion, he is the right man in the right place.

Hoping that friends may approve and critics spare, and that the Lord will bless the labor we have performed, we commit our work, our successors, our friends and ourself, unto his kind protection, and bid to the closing year, to the ninth volume of our paper, and to all our readers, our last, annual, editorial valediction.

Elder Joseph R. Swalt was thrown out of a wagon on Saturday night a week, considerably stunned for a time, but picked up by passers-by and conveyed to his home. But escaped with less injury than had been anticipated.—Lewistown Gazette.

Will not those of our customers who know themselves to be indebted to us, remit our dues without farther notice, and thus spare us farther trouble, as well as relieve our pressing wants? Please respond at once.

Hereafter address such letters to us only, that refer to our own personal business. All business relating to the paper in the future, for books, almanacs; all correspondence, contributions, &c. must be addressed to J. Quinter, Dale City, Somerset county, Pa.

Persons wishing to purchase a dwelling house in Dale City, are invited to call and examine the residence of the retiring editor of this paper. As we shall leave the place, we desire very much to sell our property, and will take a fair price. It is a very substantial and commodious house, and has a well of good water at the door. It is located in the most desirable part of town, for a private residence.

In our editorial correspondence, page 792, third column, 28th line from the top, read whose visages we but faintly recall, instead of "plainly."

Editorial Correspondence.

Monday, Nov. 24. Having no special desire to go farther, and having spent all the time and money at Hastings that we thought necessary for the present, we set our faces homeward this morning, by taking the train early, while it was yet dark.

Crossed the Missouri River at Plattsmouth and Pacific Junction. In the cars we met Mr. T H. Leavitt, Assistant Land Commissioner of Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company. We were pleased to make his acquaintance, and found him to be an intelligent and congenial companion. He holds correct views on "going west," "Homesteading," etc., as our interview evinced. And here we may as well give our promised reasons, why people should not go west, especially to the frontiers, without having some means with them.

First. Persons ought to move in the Fall of the year, in order that they may be ready for the breaking season which begins early in the spring. They will therefore have a winter before them, during which they cannot expect to earn anything. The industrious may find something to employ their time, but where all—or nearly all—the inhabitants are poor, it is difficult to find employment by which bread and clothing may be earned.

The forepart of the summer is employed in breaking the prairie. In the prairie sod, corn is dropped, and sod corn is raised; but as it cannot be cultivated, it never results in a crop of corn. In wet or good seasons, it however makes good fodder, and supplies corn for stock. Unless there had been breakings before, this sod corn is all the crop that can be raised the first season. Then comes the second winter, and still no resources from the new farm. The stock must be wintered, and the family fed and clothed. Then comes spring again, to those who have not been starved out. Then seed grain is wanted, requiring money. Grain is wanted to feed the stock, that they may endure the labors of the season. For all their means are wanted and still no income. Not until after harvest, nearly two years from the time of arrival, can any income whatever, be expected. True, those who have cattle, may profit by their increase and growth, but the homsteader, who expects to live by farming must not expect any income short of two years. Now it can easily be seen, that to take a family into a new country, where for fifty miles around you, people are very nearly alike in circumstances, with not fifty dollars in your pocket, as thousands have done, and hundreds have not had one-tenth the amount—is, to say the very best, placing them in fair prospects for privation, and in which even extreme suffering would not be an uncommon occurrence.

We are now calculating upon the supposition that all will go ordinarily well; but this cannot be much relied upon, for there are numerous cases in which it is not realized. The change of climate, and the great change in the manner of living, have been the occasion of sickness. And when, under such circumstances, the father or mother, and in some cases both, were taken down, or rendered unable to discharge the wonted duties, distress is inevitable. Even the loss of a horse or a yoke of oxen, has been the indirect cause of suffering. Of course, after knowing these facts if people prefer to venture the deprivations we have specified, for the prospects of obtaining a home of their own, it is their privilege to do so, but we doubt the wisdom of the choice. We think they ought to have some reasonable assurance against suffering, either in means present or prospective.

And while upon this subject, we would recommend our readers, who contemplate going west, to examine carefully the opportunities offered by the B. & M. R. R. Company, for securing cheap farms. All their lands are within a reasonable distance of railroad stations, and consequently to markets. Not only that, but the improvement along the line, furnish employment for men, women and children, for which good wages, and ready cash is paid. Thus there is no danger of suffering. By all means the country should be settled and improved from the railroad outward. Then the company offers its lands upon such easy terms, that we think it would be much preferable to buy a good farm, convenient to market and civilization, at a fair price, to taking one thirty miles from every place, and be compelled to suffer on it for five long years, in order to secure it as a homestead.

Tuesday, 25. Stopped off at Whitfield station, and by guidance of friend Henry, we soon reached the house of brother Michael Glotfelty, one of our agents and friends. His postoffice address is Libertyville, Jefferson county, Iowa. But we were sorry to find brother Michael in ill health. They received us gladly, and we spent the day with them. Brother and sister Glotfelty were both raised in the neighborhood of Dale City, and were happy to have an opportunity to converse with persons who knew their friends and acquaintances. We had a pleasant interview. They have a very pleasant and comfortable home, and a large family of sons, who appear to enjoy it.

Wednesday, 26. Thirty odd year ago, our uncle, Jacob Holsinger, removed from Morrison's Cove, to this neighborhood, about a mile from brother Glotfelty's. He had two sons and two daughters. The eldest son, John, died while they sojourned about a year near Burlington, Iowa. Uncle and aunt, (his second wife) died some ten to fifteen years ago, and are buried in this neighborhood. The other son, Joseph, was married and had a son and daughter. He also died some seven years ago, and his widow has married again. These children we visited to-day. They are living with their mother, on the old homestead, and are now the only persons of the name in the country. Their father was a minister, and had a good reputation. Solemn thought passed our mind while sitting in the room once occupied by our now departed relatives, whose visages we could but very plainly recall. "Shall we know each other there?"

In the afternoon we were taken by brother Glotfelty's son, to sister Sarah Sketoe's only surviving child of uncle Jacob, who received us very kindly, and we spent a pleasant evening with the family. The husband and father, was not at home in the evening, but in the morning of Thursday, 27th, we had an interview with him, and enjoyed a pleasant conversation. The other daughter of our uncle was married and had seven children, but both she and her husband are dead. A strange fatality appears to follow this family,

In the afternoon sister Sketoe took us to brother Martin Miller's, where we enjoyed a few hours of pleasant conversation. Thence to the Brethren's meeting-house, where we tried to preach Jesus to those who favored us with their audience. Here we met brother Peter Lutz, and other ministers of the congregation. For the bad state of the weather and the roads, there was a fair attendance.

After meeting we again returned to brother Glotfelty's. Brother Michael was still in delicate health, but the physicians have hope of his recovery.

Friday, 28. In the morning one of the young men took us to Whitfield station, where we took the cars, and next morning we landed at Chicago. Here we had expected to visit, but on account of the word from home we hastened on. Had also expected to stop off at Plymouth, Ind., and perhaps at other places, which had to be abandoned.

On Sunday noon we arrived at Pittsburg, and next morning at two a. m. at home. We think we feel grateful to our Heavenly Father for his protection. Such a journey, in all probability, we will never take again.

Last Words to Our Agents and Readers in 1873.

There are many things that we would like to say to you; but as limited space will not allow us to say all, we will confine our last words to business. It is very desirable that we should have all the names of subscribers for 1874 on our books when the new volume begins. This, however, we know cannot be. But if you as agents and readers attend strictly to the following suggestions very much can be done in that direction.

1. Let agents make it a point to see all their former subscribers as soon as possible, and to embrace the earliest opportunity to ask all their friends and neighbors to subscribe.

2. Let every subscriber, who wants the paper for next year, send or take his subscription to his agent on or before the 20th inst.

3. On Monday, the 21st inst., let all our agents send in their lists, whether they have seen all they wish to see or not. The remainder can be seen as soon afterward as possible.

4. If any subscriber finds it inconvenient to see his agent, he can enclose $1.50 with his name and address plainly written in a carefully sealed envelope and send directly to us.

5. Let our readers get as many subscribers, either to be given to their agents or to be sent to us, as they can secure. By so doing they will not only hasten on the work, but may very materially increase our lists, both of which are desirable.

6. We have yet a large supply of Almanacs for 1874; and we hope our agents and readers will order as many as they think they can dispose of. One, 10 cents; six, 40 cents; twelve 75 cents.

7. Send money by registered letter, or, where it can be done, by Post-office Money Order, made payable at Dale City, Pa.

8. Let all your letters be carefully addressed to JAMES QUINTER, Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa.

9. Hoping that that the foregoing suggestions will be carefully observed, and with best wishes for your temporal and spiritual prosperity, we bid you an affectionate farewell.

J. W. B.

Railroads.

Within the last three months we have traveled about three thousand miles by railroad, over a number of different routes, under the management of as many different companies. Everywhere we had good accommodations, and almost all the time we had courteous and obliging attendants. In a few instances we fell into the hands of an egotistic young conducter, who seemed to imagine that the company had employed him for the sole purpose of giving him an opportunity of exhibiting his executive abilities. But nowhere does the traveler feel so perfectly at home as in the coaches of the Pennsylvania Central Railroad, from New York to Chicago. The road-bed is clean and solid, being laid in stone ballast, and mostly with steel rails; the coaches are convenient, roomy, and well ventilated; and the attendants sociable and obliging. The rates of fare are as low as any in the country, and the route between the two points, the most direct.

A poor sister sends us 50 cents in advance for the C. F. C. and G. V. for 1874, with the following:

"It is all I have by me at this time. I will try to pay the remainder as soon as I can. I am limited in this world's goods, having nothing but what we work for by the day. I have children to maintain, the oldest of which has had fits for five years, so that her mind is gone. I have taken the COMPANION for three years. I do not get to meeting on account of my daughter's affliction. I cannot leave her more than once a year; but in the COMPANION I can find some comfort, and something to cheer and buoy me up in my hours of great sorrow."

So it is. How varied are our conditions and wants in life! Our sister is poor—in needy circumstances. She is deprived of the privilege of attending meeting and enjoying herself with her brethren and sisters in the public worship of God. How natural it is for her under these circumstances, to want a religious periodical! So strong is this desire that she has willingly sent us all she had by her. We will say to our sister, You need send us no more. If the Lord opens the heart of some of our brethren or sisters who have abundance to pay the remainder, we will thankfully accept it; and if not, we will send it free.

One of our agents after squaring his account says: "I am sorry I could not send sooner. The fact is, those for whom I ordered failed to pay according to promise; and some I never will get; but, thank God, I can now square it up myself, and hope you will not think hard of me for not sending it sooner."

No, we will not think hard of it, but join in your thanksgiving; and, in addition we pronounce a secret blessing on you, and an ejaculatory prayer that your debtors may soon be able to square up with you. We believe in thanksgiving and prayer in temporal matters as well as in spiritual; and if these were more constantly and conscientiously practiced, there might be less panic.

Answers to Correspondents.

DAVID HILDEBRAND. Eight dollars and fifty-three cents.

LEWIS KIMMEL, What books do you refer to in your note of the 27th? CHRIST. BOMBARGER: You have paid us for the next volume to No. 25.

WM. REIST: You need not return it.

JOSIAH HEIPLE: Will you be kind enough to give us your former address also?

L. A. DOSCH: Your subscription expires with the present number.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

To Sister Hannah Johnson.

My dear Sister:

While looking over a file of the C. F. C. this morning, I accidentally came across one with a short piece of correspondence bearing your name. It brought to my mind that, while in Dale City, you very kindly requested me to correspond with you through the medium of our periodical; and I remember I consented to do so. Do not think, dear sister, that thro' the time past you have been forgotten. Not at all; I have made several attempts to fulfil my duty, and have as often been interrupted. As you perhaps may know, I have cares and domestic responsibilities to occupy my time; yet I never allow them to monopolize my thoughts to that extent that my cherished friends are forgotten. I earnestly hope I may always be able to remember, with pleasure, the acquaintances formed among our dear sisters while in Dale City. Those were days that have been indelibly stamped on my heart. How we all met as strangers, but soon mingled as one family! Sister Hannah, was not that Pentecostal meeting a soul-reviving fountain, overflowing with "crumbs of the bread of life," where all that hungered could be fed? I enjoyed the sweet associations of meeting and mingling with my sisters from different states. In my past life I have been thrown among a great many different denominations, but have never found myself so much at home anywhere as with the Brethren; although I am no sectarian. I love all God's people,—for God is the Father of us all, we are all one family,—yet I have always thought that there is not so much formality among us as there is among some others.

Dear sister, I have not seen your name in the C. F. C. since our Conference. I hope you were permitted to reach your home in safety. Was not our heavenly Father very kind to us all? At least I have not seen an announcement of any accident to any one going to or returning from the meeting. Dear sister, brother Beer has called loudly for essays, I do hope the brethren will respond to his earnest solicitations,—and the sisters. But I would so much rather write letters, as I can express myself more plainly. At the same time you will admit, with me, that letter-writing is not altogether the material that is wanting to make us a good Christian Periodical. We want substance, solid truths, good admonition, administered in love. The way is pointed out so plainly to us, we certainly cannot mistake it, yet we like encouragement. We love to hear the brethren talk about Jesus. We are tired of hearing discussions that have a tendency to wound, and are not food for the soul. We are taught to admonish one another in love. In my humble opinion there is no necessity in taking up one article of dress, and making it a text for six long months. If we read the scriptures carefully and prayerfully, they will teach us the way our Savior has trod, and will give us the pattern of his uniform. Dear sister Hannah, I never have occasion to find fault with my sisters; for, when I look at myself, I see so much to make right that I am reminded of Christ's true saying, "He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone"

Perhaps you may think from the above, that I have reference to some particular one. Do not misunderstand me, and I hope none of our readers may; yet if you are a constant reader of this paper, you will notice many warm discussions, and wounds that have been made to bleed. The New Testament tells us it were better for us to have a mill stone about our necks, and to be cast into the sea, than to offend one of these little ones. How careful we should be not to expose one another through the columns of this paper! It is read not only by the brotherhood, but there are persons outside of the church that peruse its columns. Do you agree with me, sister? I certainly wish you could.

I am not often disappointed in my opinion of persons that I meet. I know you have felt the cross that raiseth us. If you remember you spoke of your affliction to me; yet I know that you do not love our dear Lord any the less. I have often wished in my secret soul, that, as a body, we would be more united—think alike, obey alike and love alike.

I had some conversation with a friend to-day in regard to pride. He contended that it originated entirely from the pulpit. I could not agree with him in that respect, for the reasons I surely think our ministers are zealous in admonishing us to plainness of apparel. I have always found it so. I know we get a great many good lessons at Pipe Creek, and if any of us go astray we certainly cannot attach any blame to our ministering brethren.

Sister Hannah, you know there are so many other things of importance to be considered. There are almost as many different dispositions and mental capacities in a church body as there are members: some are strong and some are weak, some have loving hearts while others are cold. In passing to an fro, we meet persons of all temperaments. I have met friends that I have been drawn toward on first acquaintance, while others were so cold as to be repulsive. Thus it is on the stage of action, and, of course, requires a great amount of forbearance one toward another.

Now I will tell you something about our communion meetings, just passed away, but long to be remembered. Our kind brethren B. F. and J. C. Moomaw, from Virginia, were with us; and let me assure you, they came well filled with deep and sound doctrine, which was administered in much love to thousands of souls that came together, I trust, to hear the good tidings of our blessed gospel. They labored diligently and earnestly among us, holding meeting night and day, seeming not to tire; and we trust much good may spring forth where so much seed has been sown. We were reluctant to part with our brethren so soon, yet we knew there were others in vineyards waiting for them to come and trim the branches. I see they have been permitted to reach their home in safety, and have kindly let us hear from them through the C. F. C. Dear sister, let me hear from you and yours. In much love I remain your sister in the one hope.

JENNIE E. SHRINER.

Linwood, Md.

Report of the S. R. S. S. of the G. B. Church.

The "Spring Run Sabbath School of the German Baptist Church," near McVeytown, Mifflin Co., Pa., opened its 6th session the first Sabbath in May, and closed Nov. 23d with a nearly full attendance. Upward of 125 pupils have attended during the summer session.

The books used in our S. S. were the New Testament by all who could read it, and the Union Spelling Book by those unable to do so.

No Library Books were used, (although we have a S. S. Library, published by the American Baptist Society, Phil'a), Hymns, some such as are found in the Brethren's New Hymn Book, were printed on canvas, and hung where the audience could see them and join in singing.

The Male pupils committed 2181 verses; Female, 6411; Total, 8592.

These were all scripture, except by those who could not read in the Scriptures, and were not taught scripture verses by any one.

The School did well under the Principalship of our Deacon brother, Reuben T. Myers, assisted by brethren John S. Hanawalt and Solomon W. Bollinger, all of which were elected by ballot, by the Church, at a council meeting in March previous.

Upon the first day of S. S. the Prin. appointed sister Eve E. Kinsel Female Superintendent, and brother M. F. H. Kinsel Sec'y and Treasurer.

The above corps of officers, assisted by those pupils who wished to help make a choice, then procured suitable teachers for the different classes, nearly all of which teachers are members; some of the most earnest teachers as well as officers are parents.

Two sisters were appointed to take up subscriptions to buy Rewards and Prizes for the last day of School. About $16,00 were paid, and about $10 00 expended for Bibles, Testaments, and scripture cards for the children, as prizes for verses committed and to redeem tickets. On the last day Jos. R. Hunawalt, our Bishop, with some others, addressed the school.

Now we give the work into God's hands, and hope by His blessing that at least a little good may have been done "through the holy child Jesus."

S S Officers.

Announcements.

The Spring Run Congregation has appointed a series of meetings to open Saturday evening, Jan. 24th, in the Spring Run Meeting-house, 2½ miles north of McVeytown station, P. R. R. Mifflin county, Pa. A general invitation is extended to ministers and all who desire to be with us. No special invitation will be given by letter.

S. W. Bollinger.

By order of the Church.

Dear Brother: I am here, isolated from my brethren. It is about forty-five miles to the nearest organized congregation. I came here four years ago from Hawkins Co, Tenn.; not knowing where any of the Brethren were, I settled here. I would be glad if some of the ministering brethren could be sent here, for I certainly believe much good could be done here. This is a thickly settled part of the country, and some have a desire to hear the Brethren preach.

William White.

Hord, Clay Co., Ill.

Prospectus for 1874—Seventh Year.

THE ALDINE,

An Illustrated Monthly Journal, universally admitted to be the Handsomest Periodical in the world. A representative and Champion of American Taste.

THE ALDINE, while issued with all the regularity, has none of the temporary or timely interest characteristic of ordinary periodicals. It is an elegant miscellany of pure, light and graceful literature; and a collection of pictures, the rarest specimens of artistic skill, in black and white. Although each succeeding number affords a fresh pleasure to its friends, the real value and beauty of the Aldine will be most appreciated after it has been bound up at the close of the year. While other publications may claim superior cheapness, as compared with rivals of a similar class, The Aldine is an unique and original conception—alone and unapproached—absolutely without competition in price or character. The possessor of a complete volume cannot duplicate the quantity of fine paper and engravings in any other shape or number of volumes for ten times its cost; and then, there are the chromos, besides!

Premium for 1874.

Every subscriber to The Aldine for the year 1874 will receive a pair of chromos. The original pictures were painted in oil for the publishers of The Aldine, by Thomas Moran, whose great Colorado picture was purchased by Congress for ten thousand dollars. The subjects were chosen to represent "The East" and "The West." One is a view in the White Mountains, New Hampshire; the other gives The Cliffs of Green River, Wyoming Territory. The difference in the nature of the scenes themselves is a pleasing contrast, and affords a good display of the artist's scope and coloring. The chromos are worked from thirty distinct plates, and are in size (12 x 16) and appearance exact fac similes of the originals.

These chromos are in every sense American. They are by an original American process, with material of American manufacture, from designs of American scenery by an American painter, and presented to the subscribers to the first successful American Art Journal. If no better because of all this, they will certainly possess an interest no foreign production can inspire, and neither are they any the worse if by reason of peculiar facilities of production they cost the publishers only a trifle, while equal in every respect to other chromos that are sold singly for double the subscription price of The Aldine. Persons of taste will prize these pictures for themselves—not for the price they did or did not cost, and will appreciate the enterprise that renders their distribution possible.

If any subscriber should indicate a preference for a figure subject, the publishers will send "Thoughts of Home," a new and beautiful chromo, 14 x 20 inches, representing a little Italian exile whose speaking eyes betray the longings of his heart.

Terms.

$5 per annum, in advance, with Oil Chromos free.

For 50 cents extra, the chromos will be sent, mounted, varnished, and prepaid by mail.

The Aldine will, hereafter, be obtainable only by subscription. There will be no reduced or club rate; cash for subscription must be sent to the publishers direct, or handed to the local canvasser, without responsibility to the publishers, except in cases where the certificate is given, bearing the fac simile signature of James Sutton & Co.

Canvassers Wanted.

Any person wishing to act permanently as a local canvasser will receive full and prompt information by applying to

JAMES SUTTON & CO., Publishers.

58 Maiden Lane, New York.

MARRIED.

By the undersigned at the residence of the bride's parents, Dec. 4th, 1873, Mr. Jacob Replogle to Miss Mary Elizabeth Brown, both of Bedford county, Pa.

On the same day, by the same, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. S. R. Kagarice and sister Nancy Guyer, both of Bedford county, Pa. S. A. Moore.

By the undersigned, Dec. 31, 1873, Mr. Edmund C. Varner and Miss Nancy A. Stitt. C. Myers.

By the undersigned, at his residence, Nov. 30th, 1873, brother Jacob S. Clapper and sister Mary Wigfield, all of Yellow Creek, Bedford county, Pa.

S. A. Moore.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Elklick congregation, Somerset Co., Pa., sister Elizabeth Flickinger, widow of brother Samuel Flickinger; aged 64 years and 14 days. Funeral services by brethren Jonathan Kelso, Joel Gnagy, and Jonas Lichty, from 2 Cor. 5: 1-8. A very large concourse of brethren and friends attended the funeral, and evinced their esteem for our departed sister. H.

On Sept. 26th, 1873, Sister Margaret Bosserman, wife of brother Michael Bosserman, of Dunkirk, Ohio, aged 57 years 8 months and 7 days. She leaves a sorrowful husband, two grandchildren, and many relatives and friends to mourn the loss of our beloved sister. The church has lost one of its strong pillars, as she was always at her post, and ready to perform her christian duties. Funeral by Elder J. P. Ebersole.

S T. Bosserman.

Nov. 23, in the Lower Cumberland branch, Cumberland county, Pa., John Andrew Condrie, only child of brother Daniel and sister Lizzie Condrie; aged 1 year 1 month and 13 days. The extent of his suffering was such that attracted the astonishment and sympathy of the neighbors. The poor little sufferer is now relieved, and is singing with the angels in bright glory. Brethren, neighbors and friends, the child had no sins to suffer for. God has an object in view; let us take the subject home to ourselves, and think. Funeral services by Moses Miller, from Mark 16: 13—16.

ADAM BEELMAN.

Died in the Snake Spring Valley congregation, Bedford county, Pa., on the 2d of November, sister SARAH CROIL, wife of James Croil; aged 25 years and 11 days. The funeral services were performed by the brethren, and the discourse founded on 1st Cor. 15: 50. Sister Croil with her husband moved from Bedford county, Pa. to Covington, Ohio, last winter, and remained here until a few weeks before her death, when she with her husband moved back to Pa. While she lived here in Covington, she endeared herself many friends. She was esteemed for her piety and kindness. She died in peace and in hope. She felt much concerned for her husband, and her prayer was that he might be brought into the fold of Jesus.

J. Q.

(Visitor please copy.)

In Frederick, Monroe county, Iowa, Nov. 5th, JOHN HANSEL, aged 67 years. He served faithfully in the ministry for more than 24 years. Funeral occasion improved by brethren David Sink and Daniel Miller.

JOHN SMELTZER

LIST OF MONEYS RECEIVED for SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS, etc.,

N Longanecker	1 40	Andrew Lehman	1 75	T F Imler	75
A Longanecker	70	Joseph D Neher	75	Phema Freed	10
Frank Holsinger	30	James Chrystal	10	D D Wine	10
C Bomberger	10	L A Dosch	40	C A Mason	1 65
Jacob Kintner	5 00	H H Rush M. D.	40	Conrad Beachly	1 60
D S McDannel	50	Eliz Harter	1 50	J T Myers	8 10
Alexander Mack	1 00	Joel Shively	75	A H Cassel	40
Israel Stees	1 50	Kate Snyder	75	Jos J Hoover	75
John Smeltzer	75	James H Pitzer	75	Peter Knavel	75
Susan B Gitt	75	Joseph Mishle	75	Daniel Zigler	75
Samuel Gibble	75	George Paul	75	A H Fike	1 00
G T Jackson	10	Lydia Jordan	1 00	Jacob Kauffman	40
J W Price	3 00	Joseph Holder	75	J S Snyder	1 00
A McElham	40	Ezra Reist	60	S M Miller	75
Cath Fenicle	1 50	B A Myers	40	George Eyre	1 60
John K Beery	75	Joseph Reiff	3 00	R Ross	75
				David Buechly	10
				D D Sell	1 50
				Henry S Bean	1 50
				Mathias Frantz	1 75
				Martin Row	1 00
				C Myers	10
				Wm H Lichty	75
				Eph. Lichty	1 50
				Andrew Soladay	1 60
				Robeson Hyde	10
				Jacob Conner	2 00
				Miles Hallacher	1 50
				J Studebaker	50
				Eliza Brandt	1 60
				Sarah Taylor	20
				David J Miller	75
				C P Spangler	5 10
				J H Moore	10
				A Deck	1 00
				Henry Kline	1 50
				M Lingenfelter	9 75
				Sam'l H Martin	1 60
				Wm S Myers	10
				Julia Stutsman	1 50
				D B Teeter	25
				J C Lehman	10
				John J Blough	10
				Isaac Dierdorf	1 50
				Samuel Ream	20
				D H Replogle	75
				Jonas Englar	75
				Jas Y Heckler	40
				John Weybright	75
				Jacob Wertz	5 00

INDEX FOR VOLUME IX.

EDITORIAL.

A Baptismal Scene of Blood, 315
A disappointment, 27
Agents at work, 298
A House of our Own, 7
A Minister Wanted, 59
An Appeal, 763
Announcement, Extraordinary. 603
Annual Meeting. Place of our Next, 26
The Way to, 250
Last Word for the, 331
Autumn, 667
A Valuable Work on the West, 555
Backbiting, 523
Be Ready, 139
Brethren's Almanac for 1874, 699
Brother Davy's Visit, 59
D. Leedy, Death of, 59
Chart of Baptism, 603
Christian Labor, 42
Christian Union, 265 281, 297, 314, 442, 474, 490, 506, 522, 538.
Companion, Please Copy, 427
Correspondenee, by J. W. B. 185, 203, 218
Discussion, 603
Doing Good, 554
Editorial Correspondence, 609, 698, 714, 729, 746, 761, 777, 791
How to Cure a Cold, 250
Hymn Book, the Brethren's 731
I will Never Leave Thee nor Forsake Thee, 8
Knowledge of God; The Second-hand and the Direct, 776
Last Word, &c. for 1873, 793
Lippincott's Magazine, 122
Men Wanted, 27
Middle Pa., Dist. Meeting, 250, 329
No License, 74
Notes by the Way, 235
Obituary of Mary A. Myers, 203
Our Arrival at Dale City, 731
Eastern Visit, 634
Philadelphia Correspondence, 43
Report, 382, 427
Trip to Armstrong County—the Discussion, 650
Western Trip, 539
Plagiarism, 507
Pleasing Father, 458
Proceedings of A. M., at Dale City, 354
Proposed Visit, 112
Railroads, 793
Railroad Privileges, 249, 266
Report of Western D. M. of Pa., 347
Right Feeling, The Worth of, 762
Salutation, 699, 730
Scruples: Too Many, Too Few, 491
Sinning Greatly, 443
Slander, 249
Spring Lovefeast, 266
Thanksgiving, 746
The Blunt Iron, 745
The Usual Invitation, 249
The Work of Destruction, 26
Thoughts on entering upon Vol. IX, 7
The Christian Life, 554
The C. F. C. and G. V., 746
To Agents, 715
Trip to Blair County, 571, 586
Valedictory, 791
Visit by Brother James Quinter, 458, 586
Wanted, Money, 218
Weak Handed, 153
Western Trip, 331, 650
Postponed, 475
Woman's Sphere and the Covering Question, 664

POETRY.

A Blessed Friend, 420
Afterward, 28
Afternoon, 468
A German Trust Song, 521
A Mother's Love, 520
A Man With an Aim, 422
Ask for the Old Paths, 36
Asking and Giving, 485
A Word of Kindness, 611
Be Kind to the Little Ones, 241
Beyond, 296
Bury Me in a Free Land, 232
Closer than a Brother, 774
"Crown Our Jesus." 5
Climbing up Zion's Hill, 52
Change, 115
Christendom, 712
Christian Salutation, 740
Christ Our All in All, 732
Emotions that Cannot be Told, 721
Emigrant's Dying Child, 455
Entire Consecration, 50
Familiar Quotations, 644
Feet Washing, 744
God Knows, 564
God's Love to Man, 648
Heavenly Visitor, 687
How Long? 116
Beautiful, 472
He Leadeth Me, 504
Hold on, My Heart, 610
Hymn, 24
Infidelity, 216

I Wonder Why? 260
In Memory of Mrs. Mary Forsythe 482
Jesus Died on Calvary, 369
Jesus Be Thou my Comforter, 396
Judge Not, 259, 659
Leave Open the Gates you Go Through, 742
Living Waters, 17
Lines on the Death of Mrs. Lizzie Meyers, 476
Lines on the Death of Horatio Niece, 548
Lovely Morning, 484
Memories, 106
Milton's Last Poem, 743
Mother, Home and Heaven, 441
Morn, 692
My Home is There, 600
Never Mind, 340
Not Now, 560
Old Age, 689
Old Man in the Stylish Church 66
Old Man in the Model Church, 145
One by One, 696
On the Death of Bro. J. Funk, 186
On the Death of a Sister, 646
Over There, 273
Passing Away, 647
Papa Come Help me Across, &c. 145
Patient Little Fred, 184
Patience, 448
Pilgrim Are you Weary? 326
Pureness, 231
Rock of Ages, 86
Roses. 593
Shall I Stand the Test? 225
Stoner E. W. 764
Story of the Cross, 343
"Stylish," 244
Thoughts of Heaven, 421
The Four Seasons, 660
To Sinners, 161
Tobacco, by Silas Thomas 164
To Thee, 663
Tosday and To-morrow, 83
To an Autumn Leaf, 19
The Good We Might Do, 440
Crucifixion, 227
Christian Exode 24
Sabbath, 73
Battle of Life, 257
Shepherd Boy, 258
Pastor's Crown, 312
Dying Child, 341
Farther Shore, 417
Two Malefactors, 422
They Say, 635
Three Women, 344
Thy Kingdom Come, 82
Thy Will, My God, Be Done, 346
Unrest and Rest, 632
Who Shall Roll Away the Stone? 451
White as Snow, 500
Winter will not Last Forever, 167
Willie, 568
You Have Been a Friend to Me. 497
The Day is Done, 680
Summer Days are Coming, 424
The Beautiful Gate, 454
Footsteps of Decay, 498
City of God, 516
Heart I Love, 529
Hand that Rocks the World, 569
Better Land, 576
Friends Burial, 589
Last Supper, 601
Altar at Home, 627
Difference. 628
Family Bible, 644
Blessed Story, 649
Suffering Savior, 708
Tried Gold, 720
Trust in God, 728

CORRESPONDENTS.

Arnold H H 61
Anglemyer Marg 205
Anglemyer Lydia 669
Ashenbrenner G 236
Armstrong E, 268
A Brother 284
" 464
A Sister 637
" 638
Argabrite Wm J. 734
Barklow S S 28
Bailey Wm H 29
77, 397, 524
Sallie A 766
Bashore M M 44
Beachly Dr U M 781
Beelman Adam 59
Bosserman S T 61 3 5
Bosserman A E 62
Bard Richard 558
Brumbaugh, G 93
Brumbaugh J W 733
Bollinger S W 93, 686
Berkey Joseph 526
Brown P J 110, 317
Beery Enoch 620
Beer Peter 124
Binkley R K 445
Bowser J E 140
Blough Noah B 155
Balsbaugh C H 588
604
" " J H 170
Barklow Annie 206
Bachman E 221
Barklow David 256
Bahr Jacob 266
Beeghly Jacob 668
Beeghly John 187
251
Buechly M S 284
" E K 570
Balsbaugh C H 459
718
Bucher Cyrus 309
Burkholder A 288
Burkhart Han. 348
Butler Prof J D 782
Bollinger G 557
Brindle John 606
Clemmer Wm C 13
Christ I H 188
Caylor S H 252
Colleus S 299, 445
Conner J 187, 573
Cost Andrew 156
Cover J J 13, 264
Cover Jos I 174, 572
573, 734
Cory H C 204
Cronce Leah 268
Crosswhite Jesse 669
681
Cocanour Adam 350
Charles M R 463
Chamberlain A S 492
668, 765
Culp Wm 253
Culp Mary A 382
Culp A S 780
Dale J F 252
Dell Lydia 300
Deardoiff M 434, 588
Dickey J W 687
Eby Enoch 222, 284
317
Engle Louisa A 310
700, 749
Edger John 318
Eshelman M M 701
Eisenburg J. Y 173
Flory J S 12, 477, 750
Forney John Sen 620
654
Frick E W 655
Garber A L 702
Garber Levi 45
Graff T W 45
Gephart J W 236
Grossnickle S P 348
Heckler Jas Y 236
252, 748
Heckman S A 126
" K 61
Heyser E 94
Hetric J P 189
Hiestand Jesse 702
Himes George 333
Himes Wm B 251
Hipple John 254
Holsinger Carrie 77
333, 349 413
Holsinger Eunice 287
Holsinger D M 10, 222
Holsinger T S 709
Hoke Martin 13, 78
95, 542, 738
Holler Joseph 170
Holsopple Joseph 541
557
Hamm A H 735
Heckman Han. 267
Hawn J W 316
Hays Daniel 332
Harader C 444
Hershberger 541
Hubble W N 254
Hutchison Annie 398
Hyde, Lambert 171
Hyde Robeson R 173
Hickman J J 574
Johnson H J 174, 252
Kelso Jacob 398
Keefer Mary A 78
Kinney A C 764
Knisely John 9
Kittinger J Levi 111
186, 461, 573, 751
Kagarice Daniel 140
Keller Sarah G 156
Knouff Hannah 286
518, 308, 525, 556, 590
605, 636, 686
Kimmel Lewis 309
718
Leatherman G W 781
Leedy E C 300
Leedy S A 30, 108
Leedy J A 282
Loehr F P 221, 604
Longanecker N 125
155
Longanecker C 13
Longanecker Daniel 206, 460, 524
Lyon T D 13, 188, 749
Loug John 414, 588
Marrs S S 142, 748
Martin H H 267, 348
Marquis Jane 588
Mackay Dr E L 621
Meyers Samuel 30
Meyers John 30
Meyers J T 62, 284
Myers C 187, 494
Meyers Joseph 431
Minnich S M 47, 62
267, 413, 478, 684
Minser Mark 140
Miller L H 540
Miller Sarah J 94
Miller J P 126, 141
Miller Daniel 218
Miller Samuel 428
Musser S 141
Musselman Amanda 253
Mohler Jacob 783
Moomaw B F 764
Mowen Charlotte 285
Moore S A 316
Moore J H 765
Myers Abraham 748
Neher John G 28, 299
Nicola J B 109
Newcomer P S 220
Neher J D 336
Noah G M 421, 444
Oller J F 733
Pfautz J E 110,
Pfautz I 783
Price I 154, 299, 318, 461
Pence J B 461
Quinn Wm H 45
Royer R 61
Replogle G B 78, 173, 622
Reedy Anna W 108
Roberts W E 718
Rockey Carrie 108
Rife Jacob 171
Replogle J B 686
River John B 175
Rothrock Samuel D. 205, 348
Riggle Mary Ann 494
620
Rigby S 540
Reuner Dr F C 639
Rohrer Mary 291, 620
Rosebrook L 636
Roop Hannah 638
Sayler D P 270, 282, 445, 462, 493, 556, 572 636, 716
Stoner E W 46, 141 764
Starm Jacob 109
Speicher D J 140
Sell James A 172, 621 782
Shane Wm B 187
Sell D D 205 684
Stowel Alfred 205
Snavely Rebecca 153 413, 492
Snyder F M 283
Snyder J S 251
Spicher H 333, 750
Spohn M I 270
Spohn Susan 349
Sadler Wm 397
Sharp S Z 494
Shark D M 428
Shively G B 637
Shriner J E 428, 794
Shriver Abel T 700
Sprogle F 460
Sprogle Nancy L 476 605, 654, 701
Smith Solomon 541
Snowberger Dan 590
Stifler E R 493, 509
Studebaker John 780
Studebaker S 251
S. S. Officers 794
Teeter Wm C 430
" J K 508
Tharp I H 75
Troxel Christian 46
Troxel Elias 719
Udery J C 334, 397
Vaniman Daniel 45 542 670
Wagner D F 428
Weaver Joseph 636
Weimer S 155, 267
Wetzel Paul 333
Weybright John 622
Whitcher R H 670
Whitten B S 75
Williams Louisa 669
Wilson Nathaniel 142
Wineland J S 124
Wingert Susan 350
Winey J G 171
Witwer D M 59
Witwer George 283
Witmore Jacob 509
Workman N C 12, 702
Yoder E L 74
Zigler A W 417
Zug John 45
Zug S R 422
Zumbrum S 62

ITEMS.

Advice to young men; Secret of happiness; The way to the crown, 51. A lesson for young men, 66 The cripple at the gate, 106. What constitutes gambling; The religion of paying debts, 114. How the world judges Christians; Lifting up both hands to Christ, 119. Children's literature; Homes reduced by dress; A woman's counsel to women; Noble words, 121. The model Family, 132. Early training; Habits make the man, 138. "Charge it," 162. From father to son, 163. Boys, listen to this; The charm of life, 202. Christ at the table, 215. Growing evils; The love of God; Mothers; The charm of life; Flowers; Two Ten; Stretch it a little, 233 How to cure a cold; Is there a devil; Three Things, 234. The army of idlers, 243. Should girls learn domestic duties? Love is the bottom of the Cup, 247. A Sweet Heart Sin, 279. Reading the Bible, 280. Unwillingness in Prayer; Christ's Baptism, 346. Helpers, 385. Speech of a Converted Rabbi; A Question Answered, 457. Truth, 467. How Quarrels begin, 486. The invisible Children, 503. Know the Lambs; Christianity; The Work; The Secret of Success, 515 Speaking Ill 519. Who shall Separate? 520. When the Bank comes, 531. Fates of the Apostles, 535. Wonderful Horologue, 536. The Worth of the Word. 548. The Gulf Stream. 550. What an old Man has Noticed, 551. Speak Boldly, 562. David and Jonathan, 563. Pay Up; Things that Last, 597. The Dead, 599. The Half Way Place; Newspapers in the Family, 615. A Mother's Counsel, 625. At Home, 627. Mine Own Vineyard, 631. Giving and Receiving, 643. Discontented; Attention, 663. Principles and Prejudice, 675. The Pleasant World, 681. How Long and How Many, 683. Water in Jerusalem, 697. Be Happy Now, 707. A Word to Boys, 709. Extracts from Christian Writers, 713. Cross of Christ, 723. The Homeward Tide of Ritualism, 725. Sense Sin, 737.

PIOUS YOUTH.

The First Temptation; "That's How"; Over and Over Again, 25, Angels in the Way; The Boy of the Palace Gate; The Result of an Accident, 60; The Five Peaches; Power of Comprehension; Boyhood Memories; One in Christ, 76; Hidden Life of the Soul; Selections; Scandal and Tattling, 92, The Origin of Scandal, Boyhood Memories, No. 2, 105; The Creation, 151.

ESSAYS AND SELECTIONS.

A Beautiful and touching Incident, 714
About Hymns, 694
A Crumb of Comfort for Young Wives, 627
Accumulation of Wealth, 41
A Clean Heart. 52
A Conversation, 401
Admonitory, 755
A Diarist, 520
A dream, The Glass R. R. 597
A few Words to the Young, 711
A few Words to Our &c., 308
After this Manner, &c., 20
A Free Press. 691
A Hundred Years to Come, 473
A Leper's Village, 755
All must Die, 261
All Prayer Power, 198
All Things Earthly, etc., 123
Almost, 466
Altoona, 52
A Mother's Sorrow, 583
An Appeal to the Church, 455
An Exposition of 2 Cor. 5: 17, 248
Answer to Brother L. G. Hyde, 242
An Item, 99
An Appeal to the Brethren and Friends of Pen'a., 50
Annual Meeting—Shall it be changed? 293 for 1873, Report of Finance Committee, 679
Anointing the Sick etc., 79
An Angel in a Saloon, 456
Another Parable, 425
An Infidel's Sheep, 744
An Noble Example, 642
An Explanation of Cor. 11: 16, Noah Longanecker, 22
A. Pearson, 424
A Perfect saw, 163
Appearance, Your Personal, 602
A Report of Proceedings of A. M. 548
A Response, 726
A Review, 518
Are We Known? 693
Are we justified by faith Only? 72
Brethren? 152
A Serious Subject, 775
A Spark. 290
Astronomy, of Job, The 83
A Surmiser, 270
A Thunder Storm, 24
A Tribute of Respect, 24
Autumn Leaves, 602
Authority of the Church &c. 396
Avoidance, M. T. Bear, 311
J. Holsopple, 462, 742
J. L. Myers, 183
J. H. Kurtz, 248
John Garber, 398
A Worthless Move, 23
A Word of Admonition, 450
A Want of Faith, 610
Babylon, Hieroglyphic 180
Baptism, The Form of 529
Trouble About 628
The Door into the Church, 628
A Review, 648, 661, 710
Beard, The Human 81
Be Courteous, 88
Be Steadfast, Be Sound, 324
Bible Quotations not in the Bible, 131
Bible, The 369, 534
Bishop's Lecture, a Synopsis &c., 478
M. Hady, 483
J. Holsopple, 563
Bridegroom, Friend of the 161
Brief Extracts and Sentences, 549
Cain's Wife, 714
Call, the Master's 744
Can any one Hide Himself? 519
Care and Favors of God, 678
Cause of Ministers Breaking down, one 81
Charities that Sweeten Life, 568
Charity 451
Cheating the Dying, 5
Childhood. 690
Christian Duties, 561
Study, 658
Christ, the Reign of 546
the Body of 183
Kingdom of etc., 584
Christianity and the Love of the Beautiful, 488
Christianity and Woman, 244
Christian Development, 35
Courtesy, 341
Evidences, 211
Perfection, 342
Uniform, 676
Christians the Light of the World, 49
A Word to Young 215
the Christian's Companion, 439
Christianity, 705
Christ's Epistles, 728
Christian and Savage Warfare, 741
Church, the Door of 131 of Christ, The 276
Collections, 580
Gambling, 631
The True, 291
The only True 521
and the World, 453
Close Communion, Thoughts on 725
Compassion of Jesus, The 674
Committees, 633
Commandments, Keeping the 227
Communion with God, 346
Congregational, 564
Consistency. 84
Conversion? What is True 102

Consistency of Blood-shed and Self-Defense, 194
Constables &c., 646
Covetousness, 502
Covering, The E. Leedy, 217
A. D. Hutchison, 418
M. Deardorff, 485
Criminal's Repentance,
Cross? Did the Savior bear the 19
Crown, That 228 of Pride, 712
Customs, 51
Daily Devotion, G. B. Shively, 289
P. B. Kaufman, 307
Danger, 511
Dangerous, Is Knowledge 788
Darkness over New England etc., 756, 744
Death, 209, 727
Penalty, The 653
Dead-line, The 657
Declension, 692
Different Degrees of Glory, 119
Distance from Chicago to Pittsburg 301
Doctrinal Preaching, 773
Doctrine, The Book of 35
Domestic Life, 787
Do not, 705
Doors, The Two 786
Dr. Kitto's Boyhood, 470
Drunkenness, 165
Earnest? Are we 593
Educate or Perish, 632
Elijah's Coming yet Future? 101
Energy, 416
Epizootic, A Thought Suggested by 52
Error Exposed, 136
Evangelical Alliance, 679
Evil of Tobacco Using, The 682
Evil Speaking, 706
Explanation, 234
Explanation on Matth. 23: 15, 144
Explanatory, 790
Exposition of Col. 1: 21, 22, 262, 277
Faith and Works, 217
Worketh by Love, 713
Faith Alone, 112
False Precept, 115
Family Love, 66
Altar, 513
Duties, 97
Reunion, Interesting 422
Prayer 625
Religion 696
Fault Finders, 84
Feetwashing, 682
Fiction, 566
Finery for Babies, 644
Following Afar Off, 69
Forgiveness and Forgiving, 454
Foundation, The Sure 371
Four Servants of Satan, 616
Friend Harper's Trial, 484
Future of the Wicked, 328
Galileo Before the Inquisition 104
Gambling, 231
Giving, The Blessedness of 676
Glorifying God, 785
God, The Love of 260
There is a 689
Godliness, 344
Good Luck, 211
Gospel, The 67
Gratitude, 578
Great Change, The Last 754
Growing Evils, 232
Guilty Concerning our Sister, 647
Habit of Drunkenness, 738
Happiness, F. M. Snyder, 177
Happiness, The Secret of 144
Have You Ties in Heaven? 214
Ever Thought? 595, 681
Hear, Trust, Obey, 598
Holiness and Peace, 260
Home, A Happy 258
Home, C. G. Garman, 23
" M. Hady 178
Hope, 71
of Saving the Lost, 581
Horses in the Pocket, 296
Hospitality, 73
How to be Saved, 123
Did the Apostles Baptize?
D. E. L. Mackay, 411
T. D. Lyon, 450
How Did Moses Obtain his Information, 472
How to Become a Good Writer, 534
To be of the Same Mind, 499
How to Pray, 785
Humming Bird, 344
I Don't Believe Grandpa, &c., 311
Ill Luck, 311
Importance of Singing, 760
Inconsiderate Brethren, 653
Intemperance, 401
Invitations, 674
and Warnings, 760
Is Baptism Essential? 613
Is Christ's Coming Delayed? 116
Is it well with the Boy? 6
This Right, 614
Israelites, The 708
It Is I Be Not Afraid, 788
I Will Come Again, 789
I will go and Prepare &c., 340
Jesus in the Heart, 263
Jesus Wept, J. T. Meyers, 19
S. W. Will, 82
642
Christ, the Same &c., 246
The object of our Love, 547
In the Valley, 739
Joy of Saving the Lost, The 244
Judge Not, 612
Justification, 167
Keep thyself Pure, 549
Good Heart, 693
Kindness to Animals, 695
Korah, The Modern 618
Lay not up for Yourselves, &c., 467
" " " 726
Laying on of Hands, 504
Least Commandment, 517
Lending Tools, 135
Let your Light so Shine &c., 422
Shine, 534
Let us Walk in the Light, 673
Work Together in Love, 728
License or No License,
Moses Miller, 37
James A. Sell, 65
Michael Hady, 117
D. Hochstetler, 165
J. H. Bullitter 173
Liberty, 441
Light Giving, 740
Little Things, 481
Looking Back, 103
Lonely Workers, 771
Love, J. B. Wampler, 467
" Rebecca Snavely, 453
" J. Heistand, 183
Love God, 103
and Fear, J. F. Oller, 132
" " E. Eby, 195
Loved ones mingle not with the World, 107
Love as Brethren, 516
Each Other, 561
The Law of 652
What is 657
Lucre, The Lust of 487
Lying' 487
Machpelah, Cave of 452
Make to Yourselves Friends, 81, 181, 230
Manner of Preaching, 629
Man a Three-fold Being, 148
But Dust, 257
Master's Call, The 213
Mighty to Save, 565
Miscellany, Religious 6
Mission, The Brethren's George Hanawalt, 280
Question, Peter Stouffer, 436
Missionary Cause, 38
Misapprehensions, 466
Modern Egypt, 753
Money as an Object in Life, 602
Moral Strength, 630
Morality and Love, 264
Moral Courage, 309
in Every-day Life, 617
Mourner's Bench Religion, M. Hady, 337
H. H. Weimer, 420
Mourner's Bench, The 419
Music, 616
Mustache, T. F. Tukesbury, 519
J. P. Miller, 643
Neglect of Small Virtues, 740
New Commandment, The 53
Nicknames, 322
Non-resistance, 264
Obedience, 212
Offenses, Public and Private, 613
Oil, the Bottle of, 117
Old Year, Farewell to the 773
On Friends, Departed, 663
On Galatians 5: 22 23, 325
Ordaining Deacons, 385
Orphans, How to be Cared for, 89
Ought Brethren take part, &c., 500
Our Primary Existence 133

Church, 465
Father Knoweth, 503
Periodicals, 633
School, No. 1, 594
Sunday-school, 716
Time is Short,
Outward Signs, 709
Outlines of a Sermon, etc. 189
Pardon, 57
Pardon, Can a Criminal Obtain, 788
Parables, 150
Paris, The Dead of 660
Parental Influence,, 294, 344, 497
Teaching, 563
Parents Aim, 532
Parisian Foundlings, 680
Past, Present and Future, 609
Peace, 37
Peculiarities, 583
Peculiarity of Attire, 578
Persecution, 211
Physician, Heal Thyself, 650
Plagiarism, 371
Plainness of Dress, 370
Pleasant plants and Strange slips, 118
Political Strife, 727
Arena, D. Mayer, 437
E. M Schrock, 471
Prayers, N. Longanecker, 36
" E. Wetzel, 259
Pray without Ceasing, 226
Preach the Word, 440
Preaching and Doing, 146
Pride, S. C. Bashore, 627
Pride, 774
Pride in its Various Forms, 533
Pride of Dress, 343
Pride, H. Shank, 402
Progression, 532
Profligate Son, Letter to a 177
Proverbs from the Talmud, 732
Proceedings of A. M., Held at Dale City, Pa., 354, 372, 388, 404
Prove all Things, 599
Queries, Answer to 145
Raise the Fallen etc., 163
Reaching the Heart 610
Reconciled in Court, Two Brothers 786
Reflections on the Past, Present and Future, 569
Regeneration, 611
Religious Dialogue, 90
Religion, 296
Relief in Trouble, 321
Religion—Natural and Revealed, 616
Repentance and Conversion, 206 unto Salvation for Murderers? Is there any D. P. Sayler, 536
Repentance, Criminal's, again 600
Resurrection, The 54
Review of an article on Baptism, 321
Riches, 71
Rich Man and Lazarus, 195, 517
Sabbath, The 73
Sabbaths, The last of the Jewish 612
Sabbath Schools, A. L. Garber, 310
Leo. A. Dosch, 568
Sabbath, Your Last 790
Salvation, 4, 58, 421
of Sinners, 274
Scripture Illustrations, 214
Scriptures, The 56, 69, 100, 179, 196
214, 292, 326, 380
Science and the Bible, 132
Secret Societies, 645
Secret Prayer, 200
Selfishness vs. Charity, 40
Self-Examination, 708
Serenity of Mind, 136
Sermon, By A. Younce, 356
Enoch Eby, 363, 380,
John Wise, 364
Set Your Affections, 258
Shall the A. M. Be Changed? 551
"She Hath done what She Could." 327
Sign of a Call to the Ministry, 499
Sinners Invited, 117
Sin Against the Holy Ghost, 403
Sinning Greatly; 439
Singing, N. B. Blough, 439
" Fred. P. Loehr, 589
Silent We Cannot be, 502
Slander, 369
Slang, 547
"Smashed," A fine Sermon, 610
Solemnity of Death, 769
Sowing the Good Seed, 683
Speak to the Fallen, 418
Stand, 386
Stray Sheep, 721
Suavity of Manners, 40
Sueing at the Civil Law, 323
Sufficiency of Christ, S. M. Minnich, 722
" " M. S. Bool, 758
Supper at Last, 505
Symbols, 775
Talk at Home, A 216
Terms. The Same Old 3
Thankfulness, 214
The Ark and Dagon, 707
" Balm of Gilead, 202
" Better Part, 644
" Bridegroom Cometh, 33
" Lord at the Door, 34
" Creation, 225
" Successful Superintendent, 418
" Great Theme, 552
" Mind, 773
They Shall Hunger no More, 661
Things that are Coming 201, 721
Thirty Reasons, 99
Thoughts,
Thoughts on the Future, 274
Think of This, 184
Time is Short, 144
Time, 690
Transactions of Matthew, &c. 273
To-morrow, 99
" " Selected 593
To the Young, 631
the Poor, &c. Luke 7 : 22. 105
Tobacco, Reply to Wm. Culp, 289
" J. Y. Heckler, 626
To the Reader, 645
Truth, 789
Turn or Die, 305
" " 436
Uniform, The Christian 570
Union, 659
Unto John's Baptism, M. Neher 452
" " " J. Y. Heckler 521
Utility, S. M. Minnich 544
Variety, 108
Voting For No License 117
Walking in the Light, N. B. Blough 210
" " " P. A. Miller 312
Was St Paul a Bachelor? 724
Wages for Preachers. 217
Washing Pots and Cups, 17
Watching for Souls, 423
We Love Each Other, 117
Wealth, 274
We are Passing Away, 291
Wonder, 531
What Shall We Do? 71 is Truth? 280
I Don't Like to See, 327 is It, The Lord's Supper 370 can be Done for the Children, 639
When Thou Art Converted, &c. 56
Where is the West? 645
Who Are our Friends, 412
Who is Able to Stand? 674
shall Separate us from Christ? 53 has made us to Differ? 55 hath Believed our Report? 128
Wholesome Words, 468
Why is It? by E. Eby, 213
I. P. Parker, 69
B. Snowberger 531
C. C. Gibson 578
Will it Pay? 738
Will the Moral Man be Saved? 455
Ye also go Away? 325
Willing to Go, and All is Well, 505
Wisdom is Justified, &c. 338
Witness for Jesus, 143
Worthy, The Most 228
Worship, The True 353
Work for Every Christian 465
as the Fashion, 472
Yoke of Jesus, The 85
Yet Still They Come. 535
Zeal, but not According to Knowledge, 681

